Interesting Experiments.

From Paris we receive the report of experiments conducted with an instrument on which the palm of the hand is placed and a downward pressure exercised. Sixty-four men, aged from 25 to 45 years, belonging to the middle classes, and whose ordinary occupation did not necessitate any sort of manual work, were prevailed upon to try their strength. The strongest man was able to produce a pressure equivalent to 85 kilogrammes, the weakest to 40 kilogrammes, and the average was 56 kilogrammes. There was also an average difference of 10 kilogrammes between the strength of the right and left hand; but the shorter men were nearly as strong as the tall men, as an average difference of only three kilogrammes was noted. The number of women whose services were secured for exactly the same trial of strength was, unfortunately, not the same. There were only fifty-two women, but these were taken from the same class of society. The force of the strongest woman amounted only to 44 kilogrammes, and that of the weakest to 16 kilogrammes, while the average was 34 kilogrammes. Thus it may be said that in this particular form of exercise women only possess three-fifths the strength of men. The difference of the right hand over the left in women amounted to 5 kilogrammes 50 grammes, while the smaller women proved to be a little stronger than their taller sisters.

An Insane Minister in the Pulpit.

The Selma (Ala.) Times says: The Rev. J. S. Povy, a Methodist divine, in charge of the Brown Station circuit, was to have filled his regular appointment at the above named place on last Sabbath. At the usual hour he entered the pulpit, kneeling, as is customary with ministers, to offer a short prayer, but remained in that position for fully fifteen minutes, when he arose and opened the services by reading a hymn, which was sung by the congregation. He then offered a short prayer, and immediately read the second hymn, when he closed his hymn book, opened the Bible, and placing both hands on the same as if resting, remained in that position fully half an hour, during which time the congregation sang three more hymns. He was then asked by a member to close the services, to whom he paid no attention, but remained motionless and speechless. The congregation in the meantime dismissed itself, a few gentlemen remaining better to acquaint themselves with the strange actions of the pastor. Not replying to any interrogations, he was finally taken hold of to be seated, when he rather abruptly pulled away and seated himself. He was asked to accompany one of the gentlemen to his residence, to which he neither gave assent nor refused, but remained mute as before. On being told that the church would be locked and closed soon, that he could not remain where he was, and that he must move somewhere, he arose and accompanied them to the front steps, where he again made a long stop. He was finally induced to accompany them to the residence of Dr. J. G. Groves. He spoke not a word to anyone until the next morning, when he appeared and asked for a pen and ink, as he wished to attend to a little business, and from that time on he seemed to have returned to his semi-unconscious state. At times he would appear, by look only, to be perfectly rational and intelligent, but the moment food, a particle of which he had not or would not touch during the while, was placed before him he would push it aside and gaze upon it in such an abstracted way as to exhibit fear of the same. At one time during the day he entered the room of Mrs. Groves and stood before the fire three hours without uttering so much as a syllable, when he left, only to roam in and about the yard as might a somnambulist. He was accompanied to this city by Dr. Groves, and in charge of the Rev. M. Boland, presiding elder of this district, left on the Lucy Gastrall for the home of his mother, some miles below Camden.

The Rudimentary in Clothes.

Let us now turn a critical eye upon the male costume. One of the most obvious things about a man's everyday dress is its ugliness. I say his everyday costume, because, when on pleasure he is bent, he may wear pretty much what he likes, and, as a matter of fact, when footballing, boating, bicycling, cricketing, walking or otherwise enjoying himself, he does adopt a dress which is both sensible and picturesque. It is only when he wishes to make an impression, when he is on business, or paying a call, or going to worship, or performing some other conventionality, that he considers it absolutely nessary to be particularly inartistic and uncomfortable. Our Sunday best, our go-to-meeting clothes, are those most open to ridicule, unless it may be our evening dress. Contemplate for a moment a man on his way to worship. He is a walking illustration of the doctrine of evolution. Were his hat, or his coat, or his trousers created? No, they were evolved. His hat—his top-hat—his chimney-top, his stove-pipe—is but the carcass on which his ancestors were wont to display ribbons and knots, and other gauds. In itself it is both ugly and uncomfortable. In winter it proves a vast roof upon which rain and snow may collect in order to be better discharged upon the shrinking form beneath, or otherwise it has to be protected by an expensive umbrella. We first buy an expensive hat to protect a too often worthless head, and then we buy an umbrella to protect the hat. In summer it becomes less a roof than an oven, in which the head is slowly baked. Wether off or on, it is an encumbrance. When off, the question is what to do with it; when on, the question is what to do without it. And yet there is nothing so absolutely a symbol of civilization as the top-hat— a fact which furnishes some food for reflection to the philosopher.

The coat has several of what, I believe, are called "rudimentary organs." Just as in the human skeleton, the few useless end bones of the spine are held by science to prove that man once had a tail, so the buttons at the back of a man's coat have their tale. Few people know why they invariably appear. I once asked a fashionable tailor what was their use. He replied, "To mark the waist." They are often put too low down to serve this purpose; but why should a man want his waist marked? And if he wants it marked in one coat, why not in another? As a matter of fact, the only reason for the existence of these two buttons is that they are a survival from the time when men buttoned back the long flaps of their coats in order to walk more freely. We have no flaps now; then why keep the buttons? Another rudimentary organ may be found at the end of the sleeve. There is always a cuff marked, generally by a double row of stitches, which perform no useful service, unless it be to remind us that our grandfathers had fastenings to their sleeves, and that those little buttons at the end were of real use when the sleeve was tight at the wrist.—West End Gazette.

Florida Panthers.

On Sunday last three coloured men were out deer hunting near White's log camp, back of Rollstown. One of them was at his stand, and the dogs were heard coming in that direction. Soon there was a terrible commotion in the bushes, the sound coming toward him. The darky, thinking it was a deer, stooped so as to get a fair shot, when suddenly a tremendous panther confronted him. Hearing a noise behind he looked around, and, to his surprise and horror, saw another in a tree, which he fired at and killed just as it was in the act of springing upon him. The other immediately escaped, much, as the darky says, to his delight. The one killed measured seven feet, and the negro estimates the male to have been twice as large.—Po'atka Herald.

NORTH-WEST NOTES

Carefully Culled from the Prairie Province Press.

Coal sells at $12.25 per ton at Fort Macleod.

Water retails at 50 cents a barrel at Edmonton.

Immigration has begun to flow in at Brandon.

The price of wheat and oats remains unchanged at Brandon.

At Thornhill and Manitoba City wheat sells at 65 cents. For choice lots a cent or two more is paid.

Business at Brandon is still improving, and everything promises well for a large spring trade.

Emerson's unsettled state of municipal affairs is materially retarding the progress of the town.

The Provincial Government have notified the town of Emerson that they will give the $4,000 still due from the amount placed in the estimates last season.

A government engineer will arrive soon from Ottawa to superintend the construction of the new railway and traffic bridge at Emerson.

The receipts for grain at Emerson for the past few days has been very light, little or nothing being offered. The prices still remain firm, wheat at 80c and oats at 36c.

The project of uniting Emerson and West Lynne under one name and corporation moves very slowly, but will eventually be consumated. The citizens on both sides of the river are enthusiastic on the question. But as yet no legal step has been taken.

Trade generally has shown marked signs of improvement at West Lynne during the past week, and a large quantity of wheat, oats and flax has been marketed. Prices for the week were: Wheat, 75c; oats, 32 to 35c; flax, 85c; barley, 40 to 42c; cord wood, $8; eggs, 35c.

It has been decided by the Council of Emerson to expend $8,000 on the temporary bridge that has done service since the flood. It will be raised some four feet higher and will be, when completed, a first-class bridge. Considerable of the old material can be utilized.

Work on the new railway and traffic bridge at Emerson, is being pushed forward very rapidly. The contractors have a large gang of men at work driving piles. They are all driven for the centre pier and are cut off below the surface. Stones have arrived for filling in the centre pier and are being utilized as fast as possible.

The latest news from the North-West Territories would seem to indicate a scarcity of grain and other produce, as the amount raised is not sufficient to meet the demands of local consumption, owing to the large influx of immigrants last year. Oats and barley are quoted firm, at $1.50, with an upward tendency. Hay is also becoming scarce, although the cut last fall was unusually large.

Wealth for a Car Company.

The old woman in the black and white shawl pulled out her wallet to get her fare. Then she began to hunt in the straw which littered up the car.

"Did you lose something?"

"Yes, I dropped some money down here."

"Can't you find it?"

"No, I can't find it. It's down here somewhere."

"Let me look," and the man began poking over the straw with his cane. Then a man just across the aisle laid down his paper and watched the proceedings with evident interest.

"Lose something?" he asked.

"Lady lost some money."

"Can't she find it?"

"No; she can't find it."

"Might as well hunt for a needle in a hay mow."

"Yes; can't find nothin' in this straw."

Then a German half way down the car walked up and wanted to know what was the matter.

'Lady lost a ring or something," said the man next to him, who had caught a little of the conversation.

"Vas dot so? Vell, vell; and she don't find it already, ain't it?"

"No, she can't find it."

Then a man reading a book near the back platform began to look around, and a colored man, with his mouth wide open and his eyes fastened on the spot, said the woman had dropped a diamond in the straw.

By this time everybody in the car was interested and watched the woman and the man with the cane as they turned over the straw. The conductor came in and said he wanted his fare.

"I dropped some money down there," said the woman, and the conductor went down on his knees and buried the money deeper than ever in the straw.

"It's money; it ain't a ring," said the man next to the German.

"Yaw, it was money," said the German to the colored man.

"Dat am money; dat ain't no diamond," said the colored man to the man with the book.

The conductor grew tired of hunting in the straw and said he would like his five cents and went away. The old woman remarked that them conductors was sharks. They jest put down the straw to catch money, and she knowed a conductor what made lots of money by raking over the hay when he got out to the depot. Then the hunt was resumed until Yonge street was reached, when the woman said she would have to go.

"Did you find your money?" asked the man with the paper.

"No, I didn't find it," said the woman.

"Didn't she find it?" asked the man with the book, as she passed out onto the platform.

"No, she didn't find it," said the colored man.

"Find it?" asked the conductor, as he handed out the big basket.

"No," said the woman; "you can have it."

"How much was it?"

"A ha'penny," and the passengers in the car who had been listening for the reply settled back in their seats and tried to put on an innocent look, just as if they hadn't taken the slightest interest in the thing, anyway.

ODD STORIES ABOUT ANIMALS.

As Stacy C. Sherman of Stockton, N. J., was about to shoot a rabbit, an eagle swooped down and carried it off.

A chicken ventriloquist is one of the curiosities of Concord, Ky. He crows with clarion notes, and then makes echo-like repetitions of them, gradually dying away as if at an increasing distance.

The owner of a large Newfoundland dog in Louisville had him sheared, much against the animal's will. After the operation was finished the dog sprang to his feet, trotted away a short distance, looked at his flanks, and fell dead.

Augustus Green of Chesterfield county, Pennsylvania, got lost in the woods while suffering from delirium, and died there. When found, his setter dog, in an emaciated condition, was lying on his body, and could hardly be dragged away.

A colley pup belonging to a shepherd of San Antonio, Texas, will put between 1,600 and 1,700 sheep in a pen without chasing or crowding any of them. When penning the sheep he has to work them down a long hill that slopes to a flat upon which the pen is built.

A Saginaw horse fell sick one night recently, and, breaking out of its stable, made its way to the stable of a veterinary surgeon who had before treated him for sickness. The surgeon's stable was closed, and the sick horse, after standing at the door for hours, died there.

A rooster recently deserted his native barnyard near Warrenton, Va., and went to live in the woods with a lot of wild turkeys. He crows as usual every morning, and thus his master learns where the wild turkeys are, and so is able to have roast turkey as often as he wants it.

Among John C. Long's chickens at Columbia City, Ind., was a hen with a brood of little ones. Her coop had been raised high enough for her to pass in and out by means of a small piece of board. A large owl entered, and the frightened hen and her brood hastily ran out. The hen then flew against the prop, which fell, and made the owl a prisoner.

An Irish setter belonging to C. W. Sproul, of Cartersville, Ga., scented a covey of birds, and came to a dead set right on the track of the Cherokee Railway just as a passenger train was approaching at full speed. Some negroes endeavored to drive the dog away, but the animal was trained never to flush birds, and could not be coaxed or driven from his post, but stood his ground till the engine struck and killed him.

In Georgia an old custom is still in vogue of carrying dogs to church. In the Presbyterian church in Macon, a ferocious bulldog entered and curled himself up at his mistress's feet. After awhile, as the preacher began to warm up, and his voice rose to an unusually high pitch, the dog started for the minister, but his mistress coaxed him back. In the Methodist church in Albany, Ga., a pointer dog lay curled up for a nap near the pulpit. As the preacher became emphatic he struck the Bible a resounding whack. The dog jumped up with a yelp that startled the congregation and went galloping away.

Drowning a bear was a feat accomplished by James Humphrey, of Gohoes. While rowing on Long Lake he saw a bear on a small island in the middle of the lake. He thus describes what followed: "I jumped ashore and loaded up with a lot of stones. I had just got back to the boat, when Fred shouted, 'Here he comes.' I gave the bear a fusillade of rocks, but he paid no attention to them, but started for the other shore. We followed, and I peppered him pretty lively with the rocks, and finally drove him back again to the island. He again started for the other side. We headed him back with stones, and went for him. I gave him one that luckily stunned him. Before he recovered I grabbed him by the ears and held his head under water until he was dead. The bear weighed 200 pounds."

The Cologne journals tells a curious story of canine sagacity. Two dogs were caught stealing rabbits. One was a large dog of the neighbornood, a cross between a St. Bernard and a large woolly colley, feared by all other dogs; the second was a stranger, a small terrier, just slender enough to get through the hole into the rabbit house. The big dog, who on other occasions never noticed his smaller comrades, had evidently come to an understanding with his little friend about the nocturnal rendezvous. The big dog scratched away all the grass and the stones, dragged up the board covering the entrance to the rabbit house, and let the terrier jump through the hole. The latter returned in a few minutes with a rabbit in his mouth, which he presented to his great friend, and both proceed to devour their supper undisturbed.

A singular combat between insects was witnessed by a traveller in South Africa. Pursuing a caterpillar was a host of small ants. An ant would mount upon the caterpiller's back and bite him. Pausing, the caterpillar would turn his head and bite and kill his tormentor. After slaughtering a dozen or more of his persecutors the caterpillar showed signs of fatigue. The ants made a combined attack. Betaking himself to a stalk of grass the caterpillar climbed up, tail first, followed by the ants. As soon as one approached he seized it in his jaw and threw it off the stalk. The ants, seeing that the caterpillar had too strong a position for them to overcome, resorted to strategy. They began sawing through the grass stalk. In a few minutes the stalk fell, and hundreds of ants pounced upon the caterpillar, and he was killed, and the victors marched off in victory leaving the foe's body on the field.

While looking for cattle in the timber hills at the head of the Matilija, Ventura county, Cal., Senor Ramon Ortega and his little son were attacked by three large bears. Ortega jumped from his horse which ran off about a hundred yards and stopped. Ortega killed the biggest bear at the first shot, and quickly silenced another, while the third took to the woods. Ortega's boy then went on foot to bring back the horse, but before he reached the horse a bear overtook him. As soon as the bear saw the boy he rushed at him, and the boy was too frightened to do anything but to stand still and call to his father to save him. Ortega seized his rifle and fired just as the bear had risen on its haunches to strike the boy; the ball knocked the bear down, but he rose again rushed at the boy, the blood from a bullet hole in his side, and he rushed at the fear-paralyzed boy with bloodshot eyes and foaming, open-mouth With a despairing cry, "He's got me, Pa!" the frightened boy sank to the ground and the desperate father sent a bullet from his repeating rifle crashing into the brute's brain. With an almost human cry of agony the brute fell backward and rolled down the hill.

Communism in Africa.

The traveller, coming fresh from Europe into Damaraland, is struck by the great communistic freedom with which every man appropriates the land and its natural products. Roads have been worn through the thick bush by footmen and the heavy ox-waggons, and the chief villages are connected by a kind of highway, but no one is obliged to keep to the road if he does not want to. They are of no more significance than the zebra or rhinoceros tracks which led to the drinking places before man appeared in the country, and there is no reason why the traveller should not make a new road at pleasure. The pasturage is free for the teamster's hungry cattle, the wood for the fire needed to cook his supper. If a stray spark sets the grass on fire, no one thinks of complaining. The hunter commits devastation among the game, the native may grumble at the waste, but he will not imagine that his rights are to be passed upon, or venture to interfere with the proceedings. The game is as much the stranger hunter's as his. If one sees a spot that pleases him, he is at liberty to settle upon it, and build himself a house there. If any objection is made to the stranger's nothing worse happens than that something unreasonable is demanded of him. In the same way that people in other parts of the world are not ashamed to over-reach strangers; this is not so easily done, however if the intruder is a native or a member of the same tribe; and even a stranger, if he does not allow himself to be scared away, is at first permitted to remain undisturbed. When a man settles in any particular spot must, however, expect that other persons, finding it well supplied with water and pasturage, will bring there herds there too; and such is the practice of the Herero, when they wish to get rid of an unwelcome neighbor, notwithstanding their communism, to bring up so many herds and establish so many cattle ranges about his house that he becomes disgusted with the frequent intrusions, and is obliged to go away from the exhausted tract. Some of the Herero chiefs have recently begun to drive single settlers away by force, but they are actuated by ulterior political views. The people are not disposed to grudge a stranger the particular spot of land he occupies, but they wish to drive foreigners out of the country altogether. An incident from Damara history will help to illustrate the extent to which this communism goes. When the Herero at last succeeded, after nine years of warfare, in shaking off the domination of the Namaquas, to whom they had previously been subjected, the Namaqua chief, Jan Jonker, asked the missionaries to help him make a peace with them. The missionaries proposed that the two parties should fix a boundary between themselves, which they would both respect. Both refused to do this. They were ready to make a peace, they said, and keep it, but they would not fix the land, over which they had fought so hard, in common. The Herero chief, Kahorere, declared repeatedly that Jan might live in any part of the land he chose at the peace, and that he should expect a proportion of his own people to be allowed to live in Jan's land. The peace concluded on these terms lasted fully ten years.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The two court theatres at Vienna paid $500 during 1882 to authors and composers and the two court theatres at Berlin $14,000.

Fifty thousands pairs of shoes daily are made in the prisons of New York. The outside manufacturers claim to be unable to compete with the contractors.

New York annually imports from the Mediterranean about 110,000,000 oranges and nearly equal quantity of lemons, of the invoice value of over half a million sterling, besides a considerable quantity from the West Indies.

The Spaniard drinks less wine than his neighbors—14 gallons a day only, as compared with 16 in Portugal and 25 in France. He sends abroad yearly about 176,000,000 gallons, which may be valued at £9,000,000 sterling.

It is asserted that the Indians are a "perishing race," the increase of this species of population being about 1,000 annually. Not including Alaska, the number of savages in the United States is 261,851, all of them being distributed among eight agencies.

According to Les Mondes the consumption of tobacco in Russia, France and England amounts to one pound yearly for each inhabitant. In Italy it is 1½, in Austria, 2½, and in Germany 3 pounds. In Belgium the amount rises to 4 4-5, while Holland takes the highest place with 5½ pounds. In the United States the amount per head is 4 pounds.

Of the million and a quarter people living in New York city in 1882 about one half lived in their homes in tenament houses. There were 37,951 deaths during the year, and about 40,000 births. The number of prisoners arraigned in the police courts were 44,867, of whom 44,578 were held, and 34,964 discharged. Of these 4,903 were charged with crimes of violence. Three-fourths of the entire number arrested had intemperate habits. The police stations furnished lodgings to 118,657 persons, and relief was given to 20,575 out-door poor.

Austria supports 70 schools of agriculture with 2,200 students, and 174 agricultural evening schools with 5,500 students. France has 43 farm schools with 30 to 40 pupils each. The Government pays the board of each pupil, and allows him 70 francs a year for clothing. Paris has 3 departmental schools of agriculture, horticulture, arboriculture, and viticulture. Their first experimental agricultural station was established in 1852; upward of 60 are now in operation, each one having a special line of research.

...Life Assurance Company of Canada.

The annual meeting of this Company was held at the Company's offices, 164 James street, Montreal, on the 24th March. A large number of shareholders, directors and officers were present. The directors' report accompanied with full financial statement of the year's business had been printed and in the hands of the stockholders a couple of days previously. From these we make the following clippings:

The new assurances for the year $254,841,73, being after deducting a lapse and surrender loss of $72,341.55.

The ratio of expense to income in the Life Department was found to 19.3 percent, being 9 per cent. less than that of the previous year.

The total new assurances received, Life and Endowment, were $3, 661, 978. 96, an increase of $350,000.00 over 1881.

The total assurance in force was:

	$5,849,899.19
	$7,800,739.19

The Assets have been increased by nearly $400,000, dealing with the capital not called up, and the reserve for the protection of policies to $1,073,577.94. The total payments made to policyholders, from the commencement are about $330,000. The surplus to policyholders at the close of the year was $9,500.

The President, Mr. Thomas Workman, moved the adoption of the report a very satisfactory one and commented upon its adoption. He referred to the increase in the business and pointed out that while the revenue was much greater than last year the expenses were less. Among the marked features of the report to which he had pleasure in referring was the fact that all claims are paid promptly and that there is not one in dispute in any way, and that the Board have adopted the rule of paying all claims as soon as satisfactory proof of death is received at the Head Office. The success which had attended the Company was largely owing to the exertions of the Manager, Mr. Macdonald, and as he was present he would allow him to speak for himself. He had pleasure in referring to the staff of agents, who were a most satisfactory body.

Mr. Gault seconded the adoption of the report. He considered the position of the Company stronger than ever before; its business had been sure and steady. The Directors were very particular in accepting risks. Wherever there was any question as to the benefit of that it was given to the Company. The Directors took great care in making investments. The assets had increased about $400,000 during the year. The whole of the investments including the real estate and mortgages were in the very best possible shape.

Hon. A. W. Ogilvie desired to call attention to the fact that the shareholders to the amount of $100,000 through the assets were nominally $1,100,000, the actual amount available for the security of policy holders, was increased by the paid-up capital to about 1,100,000. He thought good agents, but the Company was active than ever to the class of energetic men of good character who believed in life assurance and recommend everyone to insure on the ordinary life plan. Although the profits were not such those of some English companies policyholders might look for larger returns on the money invested with this Company.

He had just had a letter from the Manager, Mr. M. H. Gault, who had to be allowed to retire from the Board owing to ill health, but it was hoped he would be unable to attend.

Mr. Alexander moved a vote of thanks to the President, Directors, manager, inspectors, agents and officers generally, for the successful manner in which the affairs of the Company had been conducted during the year. He had been on the Board for years and could thus speak personally regarding the great care that was given to the business of

DO NOT BE DECEIVED.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

(From a Correspondent.)

The snow is disappearing fast and the roads are in a very bad condition.

Business brisk since the railway has been opened after its prolonged snow blockade. An immense quantity of freight having accumulated there is now a heavy business done in moving the same.

Mr. Horn, the new proprietor of the McAllister house, will take possession on the 15th inst.

Mr. John Markle, manager of the Middaugh House, is going to the Northwest shortly. Quite a number have gone, and more to follow, to the Northwest from this vicinity.

HOTEL CHANGE.—Twice McAllister has been very nearly concluding a bargain with Mr. R. H. Horn for his well known hotel property. The purchase has now been finally made and while everyone will regret the loss of an energetic citizen like Mr. McAllister who has made a host of friends since he has been at the business, we can confidently recommend Mr. Horn to the public as a well principled, honorable man.—Chronicle.

KICKED BY HORSE.—On Tuesday evening last Mr. James Watson, of Normanby, was kicked by one of his horses. Several of his ribs were parted from the spine, but under the care of Dr. Gun it is hoped he will soon recover.—Review

Owen Sound.

(From the Advertises.)

The new boat Pacific will be launched on or about the 20th April.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.—As Mr. G. Harkness, near Annan, was engaged cutting turnips his hand came in contact with the knives and severed two of his fingers near the first joint, making the fourth member of the family minus part of their fingers from similar causes.

Mr. R. P. Frazer, of Sydenham, with his family left last week for Minnedossa, N. W. T. Taking with him two car loads of stock, implements and household effects, for which he pays $400 freight to Brandon.

(From the Times.)

We are pleased to learn that Mr. Haldane. H. Stephens, son of W. A. Stephens, Esq., has passed the Dominion Board at Ottawa, as Dominion Land Surveyer.

At the annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A., held on Friday evening last, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—James Hall, President; R. Ferguson, Vice President; S. H. Newman, Recording Secretary; Geo. D. Howell, Corresponding Secretary; Chas. Kramer, Treasurer. T. C. Robinson, John Dobbin, W. P. Telford, and H. Pike, Directors. The regular monthly meeting of the Association will be held on Tuesday evening next.

Dundalk.

(From the Herald.)

Harry Ball, Ronald McAulay, Mr. Traynor and W. J. Wardell, have left for the North West.

We regret to state that Mrs. Geo. Nixon is still very ill. Dr. McWilliams and Dr. Christoe were in attendance on Tuesday. Her condition is regarded as rather critical.

Walters Falls.

The barn of Mr. William Speck, Sydenham, was destroyed by fire on the afternoon of Tuesday last. The contents of seed, implements and eleven tons of hay were all consumed. Insurance about $600.

Williamsford.

About seventy of the citizens of this village and surrounding neighborhood took possession of the Methodist Parsonage last Friday evening and presented the Rev. Mr. Hart with a purse of $41.00, and Mrs. Hart with a beautiful set of dishes. After the presentation Mr. Steele was called to the chair. Messrs. Jeordison, Speers, and Vogan were introduced and made speeches suitable to the occasion, also recitations by Miss Vogan and Miss Webster and an excellent reading by Mrs. Greenaway. Mrs. Hart and Miss Jackson favored the company with choice music.

ESPECIALLY FOR LADIES.

Three Noted Women—Conjugal Companionship—Chit-Chat.

Three Noted Women.

Albani is a woman. That's a feather in her cap, which even G. Washington couldn't lay claim to. She is not a pretty woman, either, but she has a pleasant face and such girl-woman ways! She is a little nearer to us than the others, because she was born on this side the Atlantic, and though not an American by birth is one by adoption, and she gave up her really pretty name of Lajeunesse for the ugly one of "Albani," as a tribute to her adopted home —Albany, N. Y.

"Don't you believe in stage nomenclature?" said Dickey.

"Most emphatically not," said I. "People shouldn't be ashamed of their names if they come by them honestly, and if the names they have are not good ones then it is their duty to make themselves such characters that the names linked to them will be honored in all languages. Bonaparte and Cæsar are neither very pretty names, but time will be forgotten when they are, and——"

"What about Mary Jane?" interrupted Dickey.

"I'm talking about Albani," said I resuming my writing.

Albini's record is pure and she stands as high as a woman as she does as an artist. She is married, too, and as far as anybody knows Mrs. Gye fills the heart of her husband quite as full as she fills the hearts of those who hear her songs. She is one of our greatest and sweetest sopranos, and I have heard her sing in the fifth-story register until it seemed as if her voice would come out at the top of her head. At the opera festival she made thousands of friends, and it did one good to notice the warmth of applause given her. She is young yet, too, and her life has a future before it filled with the fairest prospects of triumph and of gratified ambitions. I said she was not pretty. She has dark-blue eyes, a good complexion, English blonde hair, rather pretty figure, and looks like she might be a good, solid German girl just arrived from fatherland. Americans are interested in Albani and she in them, and she will ever receive a warm welcome in this country, and her victories abroad will be set up on our banners as the work of one of us.

"Do you think Mrs. Langtry is handsome?" said Dickey, just as everybody else had said.

And I answered him as I answered them all that I think she is. Not pretty mind you, for a pretty woman, in the real meaning of the term pretty, is as insipid as a whiskey toddy with the whiskey left out, but handsome. Which means a great deal and includes not only face, but figure and manners. Mrs. Langtry is handsome, but not handsomer than hundreds of other women I know. She is famous for her beauty because by some unaccountable luck she has been noticed by princes, and the world is so full of flunkeys that if a grandee should say hell were frozen there would be a new orthodoxy instituted within the next twenty-four hours. She is no actress and makes no pretensions to being one, for which she is worthy of credit. The jackdaw in the fable who tried to palm himself off as a peacock by putting peacock feathers in his tail was made a guy of, not for trying to be a peacock, but for actually announcing himself as one. Mrs. Langtry's motive in taking the stage to help her husband to a solid financial basis, is, I think commendable, but it was her own extravagant living which embarrassed him, and she is only doing now what she ought to do.

She dresses in excellent taste, and while she may have a big mouth she hasn't a big foot for the proportions of her body, and I don't care what judges have decided otherwise. I haven't been taking off and pulling on my shoes for these many years without knowing a little foot when I see it. Then I knew Emmet Logan, and what other evidence does human want on this subject. As for her mouth being big, I like it. I have never yet seen a woman with a big mouth who wouldn't give a poor beggar a hearty meal, while the woman with a little mouth would begrudge him even a tooth-pick. Langtry needn't be ashamed of her big mouth, for her heart is made of the same generous sort. The only anatomical correction I would suggest would be a little more waist. All in all, the lady is worth a great deal of honest admiration, and I am glad she has come to America, only I do wish she had been slightly more regardful of public opinion.

As I looked at Mme. Nilsson when she came forward to sing at one of her concerts recently in this city, I never was prouder in my life that I was a woman, for I felt that not only myself, but all women, could lay claim to higher honors because she and they were of the same sex, sisters in all that pertained to the pure and beautiful of earth. She is a woman acquainted with grief, and sorrow has thrown about her a halo of beauty time nor circumstance can dim. As she stood there before that great audience like a queen of the north, clothed in her widow's weeds, every heart went out toward her, and when she sang the soft, sweet notes of a familiar ballad, the very heart-throbs of music kept time with the cadence of her voice, and the wonder of the woman's art was lost in admiration of the woman.

"Whoopee," said Dickey, "ain't we soaring up among the clouds?"

"Soar or no soar," said I, "If there is any woman in the world I can go into real first-class-warranted-not-to-fade, ten-by-fourteen raptures over, that woman is Nilsson."

To continue. As an artist Nilsson is second to no woman, and while she may not be given complete precedence in all departments of musical rendition, she has so allied her art to her pure and blameless life that dissociation is almost sacrilege, and there are few who care to mar their pleasure by resorting to such hypocritical disintegration. Nillson has been before the public for years, and has, throughout her life, been a true woman. Rising from the humble home of a peasant, she has never been ashamed to confess her origin, and in all the greatness which has come upon her, in all the attentions of kings and queens and nobles, she has never forgotten her blood and when she speaks of home, or hears the language of her childhood her manner warms and the smile and the tear contend for mastery in her voice and eye. That's the kind of a woman I like to praise and that's the kind of a woman I hate to see a man get, unless he is one of the very few special cases that the Lord has blessed the world with, just to show that He can turn out a respectable man when He wants to. Her married life was a happy one, because she married, not for position and wealth; but because there was love in her heart and an honest purpose to be a noble wife to a good man.

Conjugal Companionship.

Another discouragement that Dr. Dix might have prescribed for divorce is persistent, ueselfish intention, on the part of married couples, to be companionable. Companionship is the basis of all animals. It is quite sure that most married couples were originally mismated, but no fact is better known and recognized, outside of family circles, than that extreme difference of intellect, taste, acquirement disposition, and nature are no bar to the most delightful and enduring friendship, unless in one person or the other there are positive vices or selfishness that prevent the formation of any true or honorable bond with any being whatever. Even heathen philosophers have urged man and woman to perpetuate and perfect their union by mutual and persistent devotion toward each other. But Dr. Dix has indirectly discouraged this in nearly all of his lectures. His injunction that wives shall be obedient to their husbands: his reprobation, or at least suspicion, of modern women's desire to be well informed on subjects of which their husbands talk; his criticism of women who are not content to be housekeepers and nurses and nothing more, are all calculated to make the women inferiors of their husbands, and, consequently, to a great degree uncompanionable. The lecturer might justly have given his male parishoners, respectable and otherwise, some hard raps, for the custom of many of them is to devote the better part of the day to business, and most of the remainder to their male acquaintances, and only their stupid hours to their families.

And, if marriage is the holy institution that preachers proclaim it to be, why did not Dr. Dix blame the clergy of all the churches for not making its duties and blessings the subject of frequent sermons and instructions? Sermons on regeneration, adoption, sanctification, total depravity, redemption, backsliding, malice, envy, and uncharitableness abound, but what veteran church-goer has heard during all his life a dozen sermons on marriage?—The Hour.

CHIT-CHAT.

Sealskin sacques will soon be sacquerificed for linen dusters.

When a girl travels on her good looks she passes for her face value.

Some railroad employs a female switch-tender. Those officials are on the right track—women are ahead of anything as switch-tenders, as when they are on duty the switch is never off, and then they are always posted on the proper time for trains, you know.

"Look heah, Thomas Jefferson, dis heah's a nice time fo' you to be gettin' home," growled Aunt Polly, as her boy came in long after midnight. "Oh, g'long!" retorted Thomas, "you dunno nuffin. Hain't you neber hearn dat de darkey's hour is jes befo' day?"

Last summer, as he lay in the hammock dreamily gazing at the smooth, flower-sprinkled lawn, his darling approached and said: There is a difference between you, dear, and the grass plot." "Communicate the variation." "This is a daisy level, while you are a lazy——" I couldn't hear the rest of it.

She said she wanted a ticket to Wyandotte and return, and the pale, gentlemanly agent with the dark mustache asked, as he took up the pasteboard, "Single?" "It ain't any of your business, as I know of," she answered tartly; "I might have been married a dozen times if I'd felt like providin' for some poor, shiftless wreck of a man!"

The first quarrel: Philip Fogg, (who has refused, after prolonged discussion, to get gaudy raiment and take his wife to the Deroruno's fancy ball), morosely—"I wish I had married a sensible woman." His recently-acquired spouse (to whom the said ball is for the moment much more attractive than heaven), vindictively—"She wouldn't have had you!"

A day or two since a Duluth lady was passing along the street when some fiend in an upper window threw out a bucket of slops, deluging her from head to foot. Wiping the greasy stuff from her face and neck, she turned to a crowd of men, and with clenched teeth said: "Oh, goodness! Won't one of you gentlemen please swear for me? Oh, please do!"

"Mary, my love, do you remember the text this morning?" "No, papa, I never remember the text, I've such a bad memory." "Mary," said her mother, "did you you notice Susan Brown?" "Oh, yes, What a fright! She has on her last year's bonnet done up, a pea-green silk, a black lace mantilla, brown gaiters, an imitation Honiton collar, a lava bracelet, her old ear-drops, and such a fan!"

"Oh, yes," said madame, after the usual domestic racket had got itself well under way; "oh, yes, you gentlemen want your wives to be angels!" "Not at all," replied Mr. Dusenberry, wiping the dish-water from his head and face; "not at all; we don't want them to be angels at all; we want them to be ladies." And then the row began all over again, and the cat crawled softly into the cellar to drop anchor until the storm should be over.

Turn This into "Funetics."

A fast man on a fast day took his fast horse and went to the end of the fast land, and there tied him fast, and as fast as he could he broke his fast. Then he rose and took off his hose and went with his hoes along the rows, and put the rose on the end of the hose—which, as every one knows, is a sort of nose. So his hose waters every rose in all the rows. Now any who knows how a foreign wight could learn very fast the meaning of hose and rows or knows and nose, or to perform any rite or even to write wright right, if his living depended on getting some right which involved the right writing of wright, write, and rite.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES.

DELICATE PUDDING.—Mix with the white of four eggs, to which two tablespoons of rich cream is added, a half cup powdered sugar, and two tablespoons of arrow-root, blended in milk; pour in an extra cup of rich milk, and a little orange water; put this into a shallow white bowl and place it to cook in a pan of boiling water, stirring for half an hour.

BREAKFAST ROLLS.—Take four cupsful of flour, half a cupful of white sugar, two cupsful of milk, two eggs, and two teaspoonsful of baking powder. Beat the eggs and sugar together, add the milk, sift the baking powder among the flour, and stir all together. Bake in a shallow pan, in a quick oven.

Potato balls are very nice for breakfast. Boil them, and while still warm mash them until there are no lumps left; then mix butter, pepper, salt, a little chopped parsley, and one or more raw eggs; beat them together thoroughly, then mould in balls, dip in beaten eggs and then in flour, and fry in butter.

BAKED CODFISH.—Pick up the fish and freshen a little as for cooking, then into a dish put a layer of cracker crumbs, then one of fish, over each layer sprinkle pepper and butter, continue until you have two two layers of fish and three of crackers; lastly beat two eggs with milk enough to cover the whole, bake about three quarters of an hour.

WATKIN WYNN'S PUDDING.—Quarter of a pound of raisins stoned and opened and laid round a basin or mould, half a pound suet, half pound of bread crumbs, quarter of a pound of brown sugar, two tablespoonsful of flour, a little candied peel, and a glassful of melted currant and raspberry jelly. This pudding can be served with the following sauce: Juice of two large lemons, quarter of a pound of sugar simmered and poured over warm; the lemon peel cut, and used to decorate the pudding.

Soft ginger-bread, if eaten while fresh and warm, is better than more expensive cake. One egg, one cup of molasses, one-third of a cup of melted butter, one cup of buttermilk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of ginger, two and one-half cups of flour, and a little salt; dissolve the soda in a very little hot water. Bake in a buttered tin.

HOW TO COOK FRUIT.—After being very thoroughly washed, all fruit should be soaked for several hours in cold water, then cook in the same water by gentle simmering until very tender, and just before the completion of the cooking process, sufficient sugar should be added to sweeten. Most fresh fruit, especially berries, should be carefully washed before serving, as the washing when properly done does not injure their flavor, but greatly adds to their palatableness.

Drop cakes are made in this way: One cup of molasses, one cup of sugar, one cup of lard, one teaspoonful of ginger and one each of cloves and of cinnamon, two teaspoonsful of soda, dissolved in a cup of warm water; stir in flour enough to make a batter that will drop steadily from a spoon; add a little salt and a cup of dried currants.

ENGLISH ROLLED PUDDING.—Boiled pastry should be prepared with chopped and sifted suet, instead of lard or butter, but otherwise in the same manner as pie pastry. Roll jam or preserved fruit out into a thin sheet; spread over a thick layer of fruit, and then, commencing at one side, roll carefully until all the fruit is inclosed within the paste; pinch together at the ends, and tie up in a strong cotton cloth, then drop into a pot of boiling water. The cherry is the best for this purpose, or some other fruit possessing acidity. To be served with sweet sauce.

INDIAN PUDDING.—Take four eggs and the weight of three of them in meal, half a pound of sugar and a quarter of a pound of butter, and the juice and grated rind of one lemon. Beat the sugar and butter together till light, then break the eggs in the dish with them and beat briskly; then stir in the meal. Bake in a quick oven; serve in saucers, and pour over it some thin jelly or jam, or fruit sauce.

Wash a coffeecupful of rice in two or three waters, then let it soak all night in three pints of new milk. In the morning add a little salt, a large spoonful of butter, a little ground cinnamon, and grated nutmeg. Put in the pudding dish, and set in the oven, allowing ample time, say two hours, for it to cook. Stir it frequently, but without removing from the oven. When it is beginning to bubble add a quarter of a pound of stoned raisins. Serve with powdered sugar sprinkled over it when it is put in saucers.

TORONTO, ONT., June

H. R. STEVENS, Esq., Boston, Mass.:

Sir—Having been persuaded by a friend of mine to try VEGETINE for Kidney Disease, with which I have been troubled for many years, I consented and have given it a fair trial, and am happy to say I am relieved to such an extent that I can attend to my work with comfort, which I was deprived of for many years. The best medical men of Toronto had given my case up as hopeless. I have tried every kind of medicine I have ever heard of, but with no avail whatever. Any person who may be afflicted with the same terrible disease, I would certainly advise to try VEGETINE, and assure you (as many can testify) that it is the doubtedly the best medicine on record for Kidney Disease. I am able to work at my trade as gilder and earn a living for myself, two children and myself, through the use of which I consider is worth its weight in gold. Hoping that these who may give VEGETINE a fair trial may receive the same benefit that I have, I remain, Yours Respectfully,

A Romance of the Peerage.

A story is reported in the English papers which goes to show that the days of chivalry are not past. The story in brief is this: A baronet in one of the midland counties in England had two sons, the eldest of whom was somewhat dissipated. He fell in love with a cook, who in process of time gave evidence of becoming a mother. The young man made known to his father his intention of marrying the girl. The father was indignant, and declared he would disinherit the son but for the property being entailed on him. The young man, however, secretly married the girl, and in 1859 the pair went to Dublin to live. There the woman gave birth to a daughter. Wishing the whole affair to be kept secret, she took the infant to Kingstown and placed it, with a supply of clothing, fifty sovereigns, and a Testament, on the doorstep of a worthy woman. The bell was rung and the mother watching from a safe distance saw the child carried into the house. The parents then went to England, where they lived in a quiet way for twelve years. They then went to Rome where they resided in 1877, when the old baronet died, leaving a property to the son valued at $70,000 per year. He did not, however, live to enjoy it long. He employed detectives to hunt up the child that had been abandoned. They were entirely unsuccessful, however. The failure to find the child or some other cause so injured the health of the parents that they both died nearly at the same hour. As it was not known whether the young baronet left an heir the disposal of the estate was left to the executors. In the event of his leaving no heir, the estate would belong to the younger brother of the deceased, who was a colonel in the British army. He, learning from servants that there was a child whose whereabouts were unknown, resolved to find her if possible. He employed experts who reported that the child was dead and produced a certificate of her burial that the executors believed to be genuine and conclusive. The colonel, however, was not satisfied. Getting a clew from his father's diary, he had the search continued. It resulted in tracing the girl from the time she was left on the doorstep to a public workhouse, to a foster-mother in the country, and to a house near Dublin, where she was employed as a servant. The gallant colonel obtained leave of absence, procured proofs of his niece's identity, paid all the expenses, brought her to England, and put her in possession of her title and estates. Declining an offer of half the property which his niece urged him to take, he quietly returned to his regiment.

The knights of old went about with the avowed purpose of rescuing damsels who were unjustly deprived of their rights and liberties, and in this pursuit they performed some heroic acts. Nowhere in the annals of chivalry, however, is there record of a man in armor hunting up at great expense and trouble a child that had been abandoned in the street, and had served a period in the workhouse, in order that she might enjoy a princely fortune that but for her would belong to him. It is a proud thing to sit in the British house of lords, and a property that yields $70,000 per year is a very comforting possession to enjoy, to say the least of it. A man who will voluntarily deprive himself of them is a hero. It may be said that cases of this kind are rare in any country. As long as one occurs in one generation and in a single country in the world, we should not despair of human nature. Persons who believe in total depravity, and are convinced that the world of humanity grows bad as it grows old, would do well to keep this story to fall back on when they get discouraged.

Causes of Fire.

It is now known that when the air in a confined room becomes densely filled with any fine dust of an organic nature, there is danger of an explosion if a flame is introduced. Scientists declare that when any combustible substance, such as sugar, grain or wood is ground to a powder or flour fine enough to float in the air, the rapidity with which it may burn is greatly increased. Their expression is that the rate of combustion is inversely proportioned to the cube of the size of the parcels. This signifies an inconceivable rapidity of burning which is so rapid that the gases formed cannot escape fast enough by ordinary vents in a room, but they may drive out the windows, or even tear strong walls to pieces in their escape. In this manner the famous Washburn Mills in Minneapolis were destroyed in 1878. One of the processes used in these mills consisted in separating course from fine flour and driving the fine through a flume into a chamber where it was held in suspension in the air until it settled and could be gathered. When an accidental fire occurred, and the flames reached this room, full of flour dust, there was a most disastrous explosion.

Finely powdered wood dust had to a great extent the same inflammable quality that flour dust has in mills, and a number of fires in wood-working shops have been traced to the ignition of such dust on the roof or roof timbers and walls. There is an especial accumulation of such dust on the roofs near the room where the shavings are drawn from the wood-working machines and used in firing. The blast used carries a large quantity of the dust through the ventilating shaft and scatters it over the surrounding buildings, where it is liable to take fire from the slightest spark. The Pennsylvania road, in their Altoona shops, have obviated this by roofing the top of their shaving room by a series of porus canvas bags which, while allowing the air from the blast to pass away gradually, prevents the wood dust from following. This system is said to have given the best results.—Winnipeg Commercial.

MORSELS FOR SUNDAY CONTEMPLATION.

Bad taste is a species of bad morals.

Ungratefulness is the very poison of manhood.

No thoroughly occupied man was ever miserable.

Too great refinement is false delicacy, and true delicacy is solid refinement.

No principle is more noble, as there is none more holy, than that of true obedience.

The more we do, the more we can do; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have.

Knavery is supple, and can bend, but honesty is firm and upright and yields not.

Never let your zeal outrun your charity. The former is but human, the latter is divine.

Put this restriction on your pleasures: Be cautious that they injure no being which has life.

He who is the most slow in making a promise is the most faithful in the performance of it.

Devote each day to the object then in time, and every evening will find something done.

A bad temper always manages to act on the theory that two wrongs will somehow make it all right.

When any calamity has been suffered, the first thing to be remembered is, how much has been escaped.

The way to avoid the imputation of impudence is, not to be ashamed of what we do, but never to do what we ought to be ashamed of.

Whatever busies the mind without corrupting it has at least this use, that it rescues the day from idleness; and he that is never idle will not often be vicious.

Friendship real and true is that which suffers even death for its friend; that no hardship, or trial, or adversity can shake off, using plain and outspoken admonitions and warnings in prosperity, and kind and gentle advice and assistance in adversity.

Croup.

Is inflammation of the wind-pipe, which causes it to be contracted, making breathing difficult, and sometimes impossible. Croup is the result of cold, though there is generally an hereditary disposition to it.

It comes on with an increased frequency in breathing in the evening; the next morning the child is better, and at night worse again, and on the third or fourth night, or sooner, it is regular croup. The child is restless, breathes hard, wheezes, and has a dry cough. If proper remedies are applied the first or even the second night, but few children will die of croup. Give two teaspoonsful of Epsom salts and put the child to bed; then apply mustard draughts, or "mustard leaves" to its feet. Wring out a flannel cloth in hot water, and wrap it around the neck as warm as it can be borne, protecting the bed with dry cloths. If the breathing is not easier, and the skin not getting moist in 3 or 4 hours, mix half a teaspoonful each of powdered alum and ipecac in half a glass of tepid water and give it. If it does not vomit in ten minutes repeat the dose with a teacup of warm water every five minutes until there is free vomiting. If the bowels are constipated use a "Nelaton Suppository for Children" every 3 hours, until there is a free passage.

If this treatment is applied early, it will seldom fail. If, however, the disease is well established before treatment is commenced, and the above plan of treatment should fail to afford relief in 12 hours, then give ten grains of calomel, mixed with one drachm of saltpetre, called nitrate of potash; divided into twelve powders and give one every two hours.

Recapitulation.—When a child under seven years of age presents symptoms of croup, give two teaspoonsful of Epsom salts, put it to bed and apply mustard draughts and cloths wrung out in hot water around the neck. If no decided improvement in three or four hours, give an emetic of half a teaspoonful each of alum and ipecac in half a glass of tepid water, repeating every ten minutes if necessary, until free vomiting is produced.

Every mother should keep on hand for such an emergency a bottle of syrup of ipecac, and give two teaspoonsful every ten minutes till free vomiting is induced. This treatment, with good nursing, at the commencement of an attack of croup, will generally be sufficient to effect a cure. During convalescence the little patient should have good nourishment.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Encouraging a Young Man.

A young man, 22 years old, had, by strict economy, laid by a couple of thousand dollars. Feeling that he needed advice as to how to invest it, he called at the office of a capitalist, and philanthropist, and stated his case.

"You have done well—exceedingly well," replied the philanthropist, "you should invest that money in a suburban lot, and profit by the rise."

"I've thought of that; but where can I find a lot?"

"Oh? that's easy enough; in fact, I have several lots myself in the market, and I will give you a bargain."

The map was consulted, but when the young man saw the location of the lots, which had a soap factory on one side and a tannery on the other, with a ravine at the back of both, he thought $2,000 too great a price.

"But the title," protested the philanthrophist—"the title is without a flaw. There is where you gain."

"How?"

"Why, when you come to me six months from now to mortgage that lot for $1,200 it wouldn't take us over half an hour to complete the whole business. As a philanthropist I'd advise you to invest in solid real estate. As a capitalist I'm always willing to take a mortgage where the title is perfectly clear."

This is what we call character—a reserved force which acts directly by presence and without means.

"They are not Strangers Mamma."

Not long ago I stood by the death-bed of a little girl. From her birth she had been afraid of death. Every fibre of her body and soul recoiled from the thought of it. "Don't let me die," she said; "don't let me die. Hold me fast. Oh, I can't go." "Jenny," I said, "you have two little brothers in the other world, and there are thousands of tender-hearted people over there who will love you and take care of you." But she cried out again despairingly, "don't let me go; they are strangers over there." She was a little country girl, strong limbed, fleet of foot, tanned in the face; she was raised on the frontier; the fields were her home. In vain we tried to reconcile her to the death that was inevitable. "Hold me fast," she cried, "don't let me go." But even as she was pleading her little hands relaxed their clinging hold from my waist and lifted themselves eagerly aloft; lifted themselves with such straining effort that they lifted the wasted little body from its reclining position among the pillows. Her face was turned upward; but it was her eyes that told the story. They were filled with the light of Divine recognition. They saw something plainly that we could not see; and they grew brighter and brighter, and her little hand quivered in eagerness to go where strange portals had opened upon her astonished vision. But even in that supreme moment she did not forget to leave a word of comfort for those who would have gladly died in her place: "Mamma," she was saying, "mamma, they are not strangers. I'm not afraid." And every instant the light burned more gloriously in her blue eyes until at last it seemed as if her soul leaped forth upon its radiant waves, and in that moment her trembling form relapsed among its pillows and she was gone.—Chicago Woman's World.

The Language of Umbrellas.

"One of the "funny writers" of the day has said that there is a language of umbrellas as well as flowers. For instance, place your umbrella in a rack, and it will indicate that it is about to change owners. To open it quickly in the street means that somebody's eye is going to be put out; to shut it, that a hat or two is going to be knocked off. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but the drippings of the rain, signifies courtship; when the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings, it indicates marriage. To punch your umbrella into a person, and then open it, means I dislike you. To swing your umbrella over your head signifies I am making a nuisance of myself. To trail your umbrella along the footpath means that the man behind you is thirsting for your blood. To carry it at at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man who follows you. To put a cotton umbrella at the side of a nice silk one signifies exchange is no robbery. To purchase an umbrella means I am not smart but honest. To lend an umbrella indicates I am a fool. To return an umbrella might mean something if anybody ever did it. To turn an umbrella in a gust of wind presages profanity. To carry your umbrella in a case signifies that it is a shabby one. To carry an open umbrella just high enough to tear out men's eyes and knock off men's hats signifies I am a woman. To press an umbrella on your friend saying, "Oh, do take it; I would much rather you would than not," signifies telling a fib. To give a friend half of your umbrella means that both of you will get wet. To carry it from home in the morning means it will clear off.

To Cure a Cold.

A bad cold, like measles or mumps, or other similar ailments, will run its course about ten days, in spite of what may be done for it, unless remedial means are employed within forty-eight hours of its inception. Many a useful life may be spared to be increasingly useful, by cutting a cold short off, in the following safe and simple manner. On the first day of taking a cold, there is a very unpleasant sensation of chilliness. The moment you observe this, go to your room and stay there; keep it at such a temperature as will entirely prevent this chilly feeling, even if it requires a hundred degrees of Fahrenheit. In addition, put your feet in water, half leg deep, as hot as you can bear it, adding hotter water from time to time for a quarter of an hour, so that the water shall be hotter when you take your feet out than when you put them in; then dry them thoroughly, and put on warm thick woolen stockings, even if it be summer, for summer colds are the most dangerous; and for twenty-fours eat not an atom of food; but drink as largely as you desire of any kind of warm teas, and at the end of that time, if not sooner, the cold will be effectually broken, without any medicine whatever.

Efficient as the above means are, not one in a thousand will attend to them, led on as men are by the hope that a cold will pass off of itself; nevertheless this article will now and then pass under the eye of a wise man, who does not choose to run the double risk of taking physic and dying too.

Drunkenness in Germany.

Germany has long been held up as a model for moderate drinkers, and wine and lager beer offered as substitutes for rum and whiskey, and antidotes for intemperance. But the serpent has begun to bite there as well as elsewhere. The Nation published a Berlin letter upon the alarming increase of intemperance and the use of alcoholic drinks in place of, or addition to the use of beer. Belgium has since 1861, more than doubled the use of alcohol, and in the industrial counties has a dram-shop for every seven persons. In Germany the dram-shops increased in two years 12,261—about 10 per cent. The Emperor of Germany, in his late address to his Parliament, called attention to the serious increase of crimes and misdemeanors committed by men in a state of drunkenness, and Parliament has sought to limit the number of licensed dram-shops. It is apparent that wine and beer are no preventives of drunkenness. Rather they awake and stimulate the appetite for stronger drinks.

The strawberry-vendor is an expert in algebra, because he deals in unknown quantities—that is when he sells you a quart of strawberries you don't know anything like the exact quantity you have on your hands.

TOPICS FOR WOMEN.

A Hint to the Betrothed.

Let the betrothed pair beware lest love should become what a French cynic has called it—"selfishness for two." Surely the influence of a great and holy joy should be to enlarge the heart and ennoble the life. Surely to be truly happy should make one more tender to the sorrowful. There is a great temptation to lovers to withdraw themselves from other interests, to make the parents, and brothers, and sisters, who have loved a girl all her life feel that they are no longer necessary to her; that her heart is gone from them, while her form is in their midst. But it would be a nobler love, and one that would promise more future happiness, that would only hold the old ties more dearly because of this new one, dearer than them all; which would be sedulous to spare the home circle any slight, any sense of loss beyond the inevitable one of parted presence. Love is the best gift of God, but it should be crowned with honor—a sovereign who exalts his subjects, not a tyrant who debases them. A noble-minded girl who will be careful in no least thing to hurt or slight the home of hearts she is leaving, she will show that she could afford to wait a little even for her happiness, rather than grasp it with unseemly eagerness.

Step-Mothers.

How many books do we still take up in which the plot turns on the cruel machinations of a step-mother, and surely writers ought to be wiser now. They make the very name hateful; it seems to ring with unkindness and injustice, and far be it for us to say that the prototype is nowhere to be found. Cold-heartedness and oppression towards the children of one who has preceded her in heart and home are, no doubt at times to be met with, but cannot many households tell another tale—a tale of love and gentleness, and mutual affection and peace? And cannot, too, some homes tell a third story, where the sufferer is the one who is looked on as an interloper? Are there not cases where a man, whose hearth has been early desolated, and who is left with little ones whom he cannot look after, with a heart still yearning for affection, brings home some warm-hearted girl ready to pour out no stinted measure of love on the motherless ones; and what do he and she find on settling down to their daily life? That foolish relatives or ignorant servants have already poisoned the baby minds against their second mother, and that all her efforts to win their affection and trust are blighted by the unholy influence that has been wielded. And when other little children come, too often, instead of being welcomed with brotherly or sisterly love, they are greeted with feelings of bitterness and jealousy. Nor is this only so where the children, naturally perhaps, have a feeling that they may be deprived by a stranger of part of their birthright. Cases there are where hundreds have been added to the income by such a marriage—hundreds not even settled on the women who brought them to a comparatively poor household; and yet she was set aside as a "nobody," treated with cold insult by step-children, and undefended by her husband. We might tell of sick beds watched with all a mother's devotion, with dying hours soothed with alla mother's faithful self-forgetfulness; of the young spirit sinking to the grave, clinging with fond affection to the representative of that real parent whom it was soon to greet in the spirit land; and we turn with just anger from pictures laid before us as false as they are ill-judged. Into how many households must the second mother be brought, or they could never hold together? How many families must consist of the children of the one father but of two mothers; and is it well that young minds should be prejudiced against a state of things in so many cases a necessity? But in the novel or the tale a youthful hero or heroine is the more interesting the more he or she suffers under the domestic roof, and that suffering is supposed to be most easily wrought by the "stepmother." Let us hope that a truer view will be taken of this relationship; that the vulgar feeling with regard to it (a feeling showing itself so plainly in some localities thas the name of step-mother is given to the most painful thing on the finger sometimes called a hang-nail), may ere long pass away from amongst us; and that, as at last the long despised "old maid" is meeting with justice and kindly judgment, the same may be meted with no stinting hand to the often long-suffering and much-slandered "step-mother."

A Strong Love-Letter.

Here is a love-letter endorsed as authentic by the Gainsville, (Ga.) Eagle:—"Dearest Amelia—My love is stronger than patent butter or the kick of a young cow. Sensations of joy go through me like cohorts of ants through an army cracker and caper over my heart like young goats on a stable roof. I feel as though I could lift myself by the boot straps to the height of a church steeple, or like an old stage horse in a green pasture. As the lean pup hankers after sweet milk, so do I hanker after your presence. And as the gosling swimmeth in the mud puddle, so do I swim in a sea of delightfulness when you are near me. My heart flops up and down like a churn dasher, and my eyes stand open like cellar doors in a country town, and if my love is not reciprocated I will pine away and die like a poisoned bed-bug, and you can come and catch a cold on my grave."

Reappearance of the Star of Bethlehem.

The reappearance of the star of Bethlehem is predicted by astronomers for this year or the next. On Nov. 11th, 1572, Tycho de Brahe discovered a star in Cassiopeia which equalled Sirius, and even Venus, in brightness for a month, and then fell back into its former insignificance. Conjecture has sought to establish a connection between this ephemeral phenomena and two similar apparitions in 1624 and 945. A not unnatural inference was that the same increase in volume of this remarkable star occurred before 945, which would bring us to about 630 and 310, and to the date of the Nativity. This star is now again due.

"Every cloud has a silver lining," it is said; but the colored clergyman who hands around the hat at a camp-meeting does not believe the saying as worthy of all acceptation.

THOSE CONTEMPTIBLE ITEMS.

The editor of the Flesherton Advance clipped last week an item from our news column and part of our Flesherton Station Correspondence, we are pleased that he gave those items as they were—for, had he commented on them without giving them in full, those who would not have an opportunitty of seeing the items referred to, would really think we had said something worthy of censure in reference to Flesherton. Mr. Fawcett the editor says comment is unnecessary, and then tries to palm off an article as a correspondence from a farmer of Artemesia, we challenge him to give the name of any respectable farmer of Artemesia who will father the correspondence referred to. It is an evidence of weakness when in order to give an article a tone of respect and credibility, the editor endeavours to make it appear from another source. We have never spoken disparagingly in reference to Flesherton or the citizens of that place through the STANDARD, much less given place to items mean and contemptible. Of course when the editor of the Advance overdraws his pictures (as he often does) we are apt to poke fun at him, and our correspondent at Flesheston Station appears disposed to do likewise. Anything we have said by way of cross-firing with the Advance has been in the defensive. We have many warm friends in Flesherton and vicinity who show in a practical manner their appreciation of a respectable journal by the generous support they continue to give the Markdale STANDARD, and it would not be prudent to act in a disrespectful manner in reference to our patrons or their interests even we were personaly inclined to do so, but that is not our nature,and we can assure Mr. Fawcett that he will not be able to draw us into any such course.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

TO MR. AND MRS. CUNNINGHAM,

Respected friends, we, the members of Loyal Markdale Lodge C. O. O. F. No. 78. having, with regret, heard of the death of your son Robert, our late highly esteemed citizen and brother, desire to share with you the sorrow which you are now bearing in, your present sore bereavement and also to assure you of our united sympathy in the same. We trust that He who in wisdom and love has removed him from your embrace will give you comfort in the hour of need, and grace to sustain you amid this heavy and unexpected affliction. And now that he is no more with you it may be gratifying to you to know that during his residence in this place he was both a consistent and useful member of society, that by his kind and genial manner, his sober habits and exemplary walk, he won the esteem, and retained the respect of a large circle of friends, who now mourn because of his removal. Though a young man he was one whose life was full of labors, being for years an active worker in the Sabbath school and latterly a promising member of the church. Recognizing his removal as an act of the Great Master, who, in His mysterious Providence does all things well, let us with hallowed submission say, "Thy will, Oh Lord, be done."

CATTLE FAIR.—The cattle fair on Monday was well attended; prices were high; a number of cattle changed hands. Trimble's sale of thoroughbred stock was not a success. We trust that farmers will see the advisability of purchasing good stock and not let them be taken out of the country.

I.O.O.F. ANNIVERSARY.—The seventeenth anniversary of Dufferin Lodge No. 186, I. O O.F. was celebrated in their lodge room last Wednesday evening. The proceedings were opened by all singing the I. O. O. F. opening Ode. M. P. McMaster, N. G., occupied the chair, and in a few well chosen remarks cordially welcomed those who were present, after which games and amusements were indulged in till a late hour. The lodge room, which has been painted and recarpeted at considerable cost, presented a very fine appearance. It is a credit to the members and the people of Flesherton, in fact, it is second to none in the county. We congratulate the members on the success of their social, and thank them for the kind invitation extended to your correspondent.

POLICE TRUSTEES.—It appears that our police trustees have not been legally elected to their respective offices. This is really too bad. From our youth up we have been familiar with the following piece of poetry:

"Lives of great men oft remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing leave behind us,
Footmarks in the sands of time."

We have seen this prediction fulfilled this spring, here in our village, almost every day. Pedestrians can leave footmarks, or bodymarks. in the sands of mud and dirt on our sidewalk. Could not last year's police take the matter in hand?

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Readers of the Commercial can not well forget that a large space has for years been taken up by Kendall's advertisements—especially of a certain Spavin Cure. We have had dealings with Dr. Kendall for many years, and we know of some large business houses in cities near by, who have also dealt with him for many years, and the truth is fully and faithfully proven, not only that he is a good honest man, and that his celebrated Spavin cure is not only all that it is recommended to be, but that the Englih language is not capable of recommending it too highly.

Kendall's Spavin Cure will cure spavins. There are hundreds of cases in which that has been proven to our certain knowledge, but, after all, if any person confines the usefulness of his celebrated medicine to curing spavins alone, they make a big mistake. It is the best medicine known as an ontward application for rheumatism in the family. It is good for pains and aches, swellings and lameness, and is just as safely applied to men woman and children as it is to horses. We know that there are other good liniments, but we do believe this spavin cure to be far better than any ever invented. 133-36.

The Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway managed to get their road open to Mount Forest on Sunday last, after a week of hard work. The officials report the work as unparalleled, the men having to cut through snow banks nine to twelve feet deep. As might be expected a very large quantity of freight passed over the line as soon as opened. Fifty-four cars were counted by some parties, extending from the station to the "Y." Several cars broke loose on Sunday and started off down the track towards Harriston and soon acquired terrific speed, nearly running into a train on the way over. An accident was avoided by the engineer on the train noticing the runaway in time to get up speed enough to keep ahead of it.—Mt. Forest Advocate.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETH. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

Look out ye farmers and threshers all
And see that you buy for Spring, Summer
Right splendid good oil, [and Fall
Don't be misled by statements bland,
Insist upon having the very best brand,
Now good as ever, in fact it is grand,
Everlasting wear without grit or sand,
Machines run smoothly, no jarring or noise,
And engines too in its use rejoice.
Carding also it suits, as you plainly see,
Heavy gristing cannot do without me.
In fact all machines are blessed by its use,
New or old it will save from wear and abuse,
Every man try it, we are sure it will please.

He bowed without speaking, and with a little tender glance at Arundel, Muriel left the room.

"The most unsociable person I ever met," she soliloquized, as she went slowly along the hall and up the stairs to her own room. "I should really like to know what he came to see Russel about—he never took my hand when I held it out to him. Well, poor man, he has a most sorrowful face, and he may have had some terrible trouble which is never out of his thoughts," and then she took up a book, and nestling down in a fauteuil, soon forgot all about Richard Brandon and his peculiarities.

When the library door had closed after Muriel, Arundel sank down in a chair and bent his head upon his hands. It might have been a second, and it might have been ten minutes, that he sat there, he did not know; when suddenly an iron hand was laid upon his arm.

"Arundel Anthon—answer me—tell me quick for my heart strings are snapping one after the other. Is the child—Muriel's little baby—is it your child or mine? Answer me! And if you answer me not true, then I pray God will strike you dead that I may know you lied. You stole my wife, my name, my place; but if the child is mine, I shall take her. You must give me my child."

It seemed almost as if he was going mad. Out of his blue-white face his eyes gleamed like coals of fire. The meeting with Muriel had been too much for him, it had exhausted the last remnant of his self-control, his long suffering.

Looking into the agonized face, with those blazing eyes upon him, Arundel would not have dared to answer him falsely; but his face was colorless even to the lips as he said:

"She is your child, I swear it before God!"

Over the worn face broke a great happiness, up from the tortured heart went a swift prayer, and dropping heavily down upon a chair, Russel Anthon burst into tears. They were blessed, those tears; the first that had fallen from the weary eyes for many, many years, and they seemed to wash away some of the bitter despair from the desolate heart, to cool the burning fever of the mind and brain. After a few moments he was calm again; then he rose and moved toward the door.

Watching this man, who was his twin-brother, yet whose nature he could in no wise understand, a deep passionate regret swept over Arundel Anthon. Ah, if he could only go to Russel as he had once used to go, and ask the forgiveness he always had given so willingly for the boyish wrong he had dealt him; if he could only tell him how it was he had come to wrong him so terribly, tell him what a fearful temptation it had been, how he had struggled to overcome it, and how it had been too strong for him.

Did Russel remember how, when they were little boys, they used to read the story of Cain and Abel, and because they loved each other so dearly then, they never could understand how Cain could have killed his brother. Ah, he understood it now; he was the Cain, he had killed his brother, for he had robbed him of everything he loved, and life without happiness is surely death. And he was going now, perhaps he might never look on his face again in this world, and they were brothers, twin-brothers.

With his face all drawn with agony and bitter, terrible remorse, scarcely knowing what he was doing, Arundel followed Russel and stretching out his arms, moaned rather than spoke:

"Russel, my brother, forgive me!"

Russel Anthon paused; once, twice he passed one hand over his eyes—then he shook his head.

"Forgive you, Arundel? No, no! God may forgive you, but I am human."

With a little cry Arundel sank down upon his knees.

"Russel, terribly have I sinned against you—yet we may never meet again in this world. Russel, before you go—Russel, for mother's sake forgive me!"

For a moment he stood motionless. "For mother's sake." Slowly a picture rose before him; lying on her death-bed he saw his beautiful mother; her face whiter than the pillows about it, her great dark eyes bright with that unearthly light which comes into human eyes only just before they are to close for ever in this world; plainly he heard her voice, faint, yet oh so sweet. "If the time should ever come when you could do anything for Arundel, I want you to do it, Russel, for my sake."

For his mother's sake—for the sake of the mother who had so loved her reckless, erring boy. Over Russel Anthon's face came a look almost divine—upon Arundel's bowed head he laid one hand.

"For mother's sake, Arundel—I forgive you."

The library door swung open, then closed again.

Merrily the flickering firelight danced on the wall, throwing gleams of rosy light upon the massive furniture and over the prostrate form of Arundel Anthon as he lay prone upon the floor. The day of reckoning had come.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

It is not possible to sin and escape punishment—end the punishment of sin is suffering. There are certain laws of nature which are inviolable: from certain acts accrue certain results—those results are inevitable: you commit the act and you can no more prevent the result than you can prevent the night from following the day. You throw a ball into the air, and no power of yours can keep it from falling to the earth—the law of gravitation is stronger than you are; you put your hand into the fire and it will be burned—that is the consequence which, try as you may, you cannot avert; you commit a sin, and sooner or later you must suffer; it is utterly useless to think you can escape, you might just as well try to keep the ball in the air.

"Yes," you say, perhaps with a sigh, "in the other world we must all suffer for the wrong we have done in this." If people [illegible] thought they were [illegible] ishment in this [illegible] nearly so many s[illegible] is, the other life[illegible] vague and far of[illegible] as long as we th[illegible] punished for t[illegible] trouble us very

Ah, how bli[illegible] suffer for what [illegible] be punished fo[illegible] the sins of th[illegible] suffered for in [illegible] at twenty may [illegible] with agony; ret[illegible] other world but [illegible] Anthon had bee[illegible] extent and enor[illegible] hoped to escape [illegible] he had believed [illegible] not allow the th[illegible] come upon him a[illegible] have said before [illegible] ther than his life [illegible] fer in this world [illegible] him what parso[illegible] everlasting torme[illegible] At heart he was a[illegible] of his own—a ter[illegible] having no faith i[illegible] in any living bein[illegible].

It was after midnight when he quitted the library, and went slowly up stairs. In her chair before the fire Muriel had fallen asleep waiting for him; her book lay upon her lap, over her face had come the deep peacefulness of an untroubled slumber. Standing beside her Arundel looked down at her.

His interview with Russel had affected him as he had thought nothing could ever do. The terrible shock of finding alive the man whom he had supposed long dead was in itself sufficient to completely unnerve him, and the waves of bitter remorse and passionate regret which had dashed over him as he lay prone upon the library floor had swept away all his strength. He felt dimly that the end was approaching, that the life of love and happiness, for which he had perjured his soul, was beginning to crumble away.

As he stood by Muriel's chair, watching the beautiful face white with sleep, he thought of the time which perhaps would come when the soft eyes which had never met his but tenderly, would open to him nevermore, when the sweet lips would be silent, the small hands cold and still. In his weakness he trembled from head to foot, and in a passion of despair he clasped the quiet figure in his arms calling to her almost wildly.

"Why, Russel, is it late?" murmured Muriel, drowsily. "I have been asleep, have I not? I grew so tired of waiting for you. What did Mr. Brandon want, dear?"

She was only half awake, and as she nestled closer in his arms the long-lashed lids drooped again over her eyes, and she did not see his deathly pallor and quivering lips, nor notice the nervous trembling of his hands. Dreamily she repeated:

"What did Mr. Brandon want, Russel?"

He made a desperate effort to control himself, and was partially successful, for his voice was quite calm as he answered her.

"Muriel, Roy Glenmore loves Louie."

"Ah, I thought so," said Muriel, opening her eyes and looking thoughtfully into the fire; "and I suppose Mr. Brandon came to tell you about himself and Roy. Are you satisfied, Russel?"

He clinched his teeth.

"Richard Brandon belongs to as good a family as I do, Muriel."

"Oh, I am so glad," murmured Muriel, with a sigh of relief. "I like Roy Glenmore very much, and always have, so far as he was personally concerned. The only thing I ever had against him was the fact that there seemed to be a sort of mystery about that uncle of his, and I was afraid there was something wrong about the family. I could never consent to our daughter marrying a man whose name was not a fair and honourable one; you know, Russel, if there is one thing I am particular about, it is family. Why is it Mr. Brandon has led such a very reserved life?"

Under his heavy moustache Arundel's lips were blue, there were deep-drawn lines about his mouth, and the strained look upon his face told plainly by what a terrible effort he was controlling himself.

"Years ago, Muriel, a sorrow came upon him—a sorrow so terrible that it darkened his life, and a wrong was done him—a cruel, cruel wrong, that must have made him think there was no faith nor truth nor honor in all the world."

Had Muriel chanced to look up at him as he finished speaking she would have been shocked and startled beyond measure by the remorseful agony in his eyes, the white anguish upon his face.

"Oh, I understand now," she said, still gazing musingly into the crackling fire. "So many lives are darkened and spoiled by sorrow and wrong; that is something I have never been able to understand, why God allows such things to be. I do not see how He can permit one person to cruelly wrong another; it seems so unjust that a true-hearted, really good person should suffer because of the treachery and lack of honor in some one else."

With a shudder Arundel hid his face on her sunny hair. For the wrong he had done, for the sin he had committed, surely he had this night suffered.

"You are tired, are you not, dear?" said Muriel caressingly, noticing his silence and attributing it alone to physical weariness. "I believe I am, too, and," with a little laugh, "as it is past one o'clock we might as well go to bed." Then suddenly, as she rose from her chair. "Russel, have you given Roy Glenmore your consent to ask Louie to be his wife?"

He knew not how to answer the direct question; he could not bring himself to tell her a deliberate lie—not while he still felt the touch of Russel's hand upon his head, not while the sound of the voice that had said, "For mother's sake—I forgive you," still rang in his ears. Half a dozen hours before and the consciousness that he was speaking falsely would have troubled him but little—for a simple untruth spoken is not much to a person whose whole life is a lie—but it was different now.

"Muriel," he said slowly and hesitatingly, pausing after each word to think what the next would be, "I have no right to withhold my consent—and if the girl loves him——"

"Of that I am almost sure," murmured [illegible] retfully. "I think had she [illegible] hat she loved him she would [illegible] ercy away—poor Percy!— [illegible] I never could make it seem [illegible] ughter should marry Percy

[illegible] undel answered: [illegible] re wrong than right in the

[illegible] Anthon reached home he [illegible] ously waiting for him. Dur[illegible] he young man had been [illegible] of conjectures; he had [illegible] n he called uncle so moved [illegible] had been when he, Roy, [illegible] coldly Mr. Anthon had [illegible] I he could not help feeling [illegible] Richard Brandon's life held a secret with which Louie's proud, stately father was in some way connected. But Roy was young and he was very deeply and earnestly in love, and above all his wandering thoughts was the hope that his uncle would gain what he had failed to gain—Mr. Anthon's unconditional consent.

"For I could not ask her to marry me against her parents' wishes," he said to himself, sorrowfully; "I could not steal a man's daughter away from him. If Mr. Anthon still refuses to give Louie to me, then——"

And then Roy dropped his head in his hands, his heart aching as it had never ached before. The thought of life without Louie was very bitter.

"What did he say, Uncle Richard?" he asked, eagerly, when the door opened, and slowly and wearily Russel Anthon came into the room. "Was he satisfied with what you told him?"

Russel Anthon passed one hand over his eyes before he answered. In those deep eyes still lingered something of the look that had come into them when, bending over Arundel's kneeling figure, he had laid his hand in forgiveness upon the bowed head of the man who had wronged him, who had sinned so terribly against him.

"Roy, you can ask her now to be your wife."

A great glad joy broke over Roy's face.

"Oh, Uncle Richard, how can I ever thank you? Though I love Louie Anthon as tenderly as ever man loved woman, I could not have married her without her father's consent."

There was a quiver, half of gladness, half of pain, in the low voice that answered him.

"You have her father's consent, Roy; and oh, my boy, guard her so tenderly, shield her from all sorrow and pain, keep grief and care out of her life. Because when a woman gives herself to a man she gives her happiness, the joy and brightness of her life, into his keeping, and it is his duty to save her happiness even though it can be done only at the cost of his own. For we are stronger than women are—better able to bear grief and pain; and then, too, a woman does not give herself to a man unasked; he asks her for her life, her happiness, and having asked, it is his place to do all that he can do to make the life he takes into his keeping a bright and happy one. There is no sacrifice too great to be made for the woman you love."

Truly there had been no sacrifice too great for him too make, for the sake of the woman who, at the altar, had given her happiness into his hands.

Awed by his words, feeling instinctively that they had come straight from his heart, Roy raised his head, a serious earnest look upon his face.

"If Louie will trust her dear happiness with me, I shall hold it always as the most precious thing in all the world," he said.

In the great city that night there were two men to whom sleep came not, whose eyes did not once close through all the long quiet hours, whose thoughts were busy with the past; one of those men was Russel Anthon, and the other was the man who had wronged him.

The next day Roy received a note from Mr. Anthon; it was a very short note—simply a request that he would call that evening; and knowing what he had to say to him, and longing to see Louie, it seemed to Roy—filled with all a lover's impatience—that the evening would never come. It did come at last, however, and it was a little after eight o'clock that he went up the steps of the Anthon mansion. The servant who opened the door ushered him into the library, where Arundel Anthon sat waiting for him.

Before he had been in his presence ten minutes, Roy noticed a change in Mr. Anthon. He seemed to have grown older since he had seen him the previous night; there was an expression upon the handsome face new to it; and Roy found himself wondering if it was fatigue that made the eyes so dark and gloomy, fatigue that had drawn such heavy lines about the haughty mouth.

In a few words Mr. Anthon told Roy he no longer stood between him and Louie; he said—and this he could say truly—that Mrs. Anthon gave her consent willingly, feeling that she could trust her daughter's happiness with him.

"And now I will not detain you any longer, Mr. Glenmore," he said, by way of conclusion. "Probably you are anxious to see my—to see Louie. I think you will find her in the reception room."

Roy's heart was throbbing so fast, as he went along the hall, that just outside the reception room, he paused a second to try and calm its wild beatings; then he pushed aside the portiere and stepped into the room.

On the little velvet couch where she and Percy Evringham had sat that snowy Sunday afternoon when he had told her he loved her, Lonie was sitting, her pretty head bent over a book. But she was not reading; she was thinking instead, and a bright flush swept her face as, looking up, she saw the very person who had been in her thoughts.

"Why, Mr. Glenmore, is it you?" she said, a little nervously. "I did not know you were here—I did not hear the bell ring."

"I have been in the library talking to your father," said Roy, as, still holding the small hand she had extended to him, he seated himself by her side.

"Talking to papa?" murmured Louie, innocently. "What have you been talking about?"

"Louie, can't you guess?"

She gave one swift, upward glance at him; then suddenly the white lids drooped over the brown eyes, until the long, curly lashes touched the burning cheeks; and Louie's breath was coming quickly, too, now.

"I asked him," continued Roy—he had both the small hands now, and his lips were almost touching the soft waves that lay upon the white forehead—"for the dearest, the most precious thing he owns. I asked him, oh, my darling, my darling! I asked him to give me—you."

It is hard to say just how it happened, but all in an instant Louie's head was lying upon Roy's breast, his arms were tight around her, and his lips upon hers.

"But you have not told me, even yet," murmured Roy, half an hour later, looking down very tenderly into the eyes so wondrously soft and lovely now with the love-light in them.

"Have not told you what, Roy?"—it seemed the most natural thing in the world now to call him Roy.

"Why, that you love me, darling."

"Oh!" looking saucily up at him, "what is the use of my telling you that?"

"What is the use? I think there is a great deal of use; perhaps you don't, after all."

"Oh, Roy, you know that I do!"

"Do what?" persisted Roy, man-like, determined to hear the sweet confession from her lips.

She nestled closer to him: one round arm crept round his neck.

"That I do—oh, Roy, that I do love you!"

So at last he was satisfied.

CHAPTER XL.

"Not until next fall, anyway," said Muriel, when Roy broached the subject nearest his heart. "I cannot let you have Louie before that—it will be very hard for me to let her go away from me even then; she is all the baby I ever had, you know, Roy; still, of course, I knew someone would take her away from me sooner or later; it is the natural course of events."

But though Muriel smiled, her eyes were very misty; she felt the pang which all mothers feel when they realize they are no longer first in their children's hearts.

"I know how very dear she is to you, and oh, Mrs. Anthon, how can I ever thank you for giving her to me," said Roy, quickly.

"By making her happy—by keeping, so far as is in your power, pain and care out of her life. I never quite realized, until now that I am so soon to lose her, how dear she is to me, Roy."

"God helping me, you shall never regret having given her to me," said the young man, earnestly; and, looking up into the noble handsome face, with its eyes so tender and true, Muriel murmured:

"I am sure of that, Roy; there is no one with whom I would trust Louie's happiness more willingly and hopefully than you."

She spoke the truth too. Louie and Roy had been engaged a month now, and in that time Muriel had seen a great deal of him, had come to know him well—and to know Roy Glenmore well was to love and trust him. She had studied him closely, had made a careful analysis of his character, and she had not discovered a single glaring fault; there was no selfishness nor petty meanness nor lack of honor in his nature, it was true to the very core; and feeling that she had wronged him in the beginning, that she had been unjustly suspicious of him, she hastened to make amends by treating him with all kindness. It was not hard to do so either, and before very long Muriel found that he held a tender place in her heart.

"I cannot help loving him," she said, one day, impulsively, to Arundel. "He is so tender and thoughtful, so gentle and true it is rare to find such thoughtful tenderness in a man; and yet at the some time there is something about him so strong and protecting; you feel that you could depend upon him in any emergency, lean upon him for support. I was not surprised when yesterday Louie said to me, speaking about him, 'Mamma, I feel so safe with Roy; as though he could take care of me no matter what should come, as though he was strong enough to lift me above every care and pain.' After all, there is nothing we women prize so dearly in the men we love as strength, moral as well as physical."

And Arundel listened in silence.

People were beginning to notice a change in Mr. Anthon. The men at his club missed his clever speeches, witty remarks and brilliant bon-mots, his low, musical laugh and superb good spirits; and they said to each other, "What is the matter with Anthon lately, do you notice how listless and low-spirited he seems? Perhaps he has been losing money in Wall Street, has been unfortunate in some speculation." Society women missed his gay repartee and easy pleasant conversation. "Have you noticed how unusually quiet dear Mrs. Anthon's husband is lately?" they said amongst themselves. "He has scarcely a word to say to any one, he seems to take no interest in anything.

He was restless and nervous—he who had once said nonchalantly he had no nerves; he started at every sudden noise, he had no appetite, his sleep at night was broken and feverish; there was a look all new to them in his dark eyes—a hunted look. He could not bear Muriel out of his sight, and many times she caught his eyes fixed upon her with a piteous wistfulness in them which she was utterly at a loss to understand.

A man who received a specimen copy of the new Chinese paper published in New York, looked it over, and then remarked that he had no objection to a puzzle department of one or two columns, but when the entire paper was devoted to illustrated rebuses, enigmas, anagrams, and other puzzles, he thought it was altogether too much, and he wouldn't subscribe for the sheet if it was only 10 cents a year.

A poet says: "Can not a man be wise without a beard?" The old Hairy; he must beard-arn fool if he couldn't.

JEWISH PERSECUTIONS.

Inside History of an Event that Horrified the Civilized World.

Last month in every paper published within the limits of civilization appeared a telegram from Morocco announcing that a shocking outrage had been perpetrated on no fewer than eight Jewesses by the order of a British representative. This sudden outrage of Jew-baiting under such distinguished auspices sent a shudder of horror through the world. It "British representatives" took to flogging Jewish maidens naked in Moorish market places, where could the hapless children of the chosen race hope for humanity from the ruthless hatred of their persecutors? Fortunately for the credit of the British name, the publication of the details of the outrage entirely clears Englishmen from any share in the crime; and, as for the Jew-baiting, it turns out that the "British representative" who acted so abominably, was so far from being animated by religious bigotry or race prejudice that he was himself a Jew both by creed and descent. The whole story, however, is so suggestive that it is worth while reproducing its leading features from that unexceptionable authority on Jewish matters, The Jewish World. In the little Jewish town of Casablanca there lives a Jewish family named Amiel. The head of the house, who earned his living by acting as interpreter for the British vice consul, was much troubled by dissolute conduct of his two sons. Like Hophni and Phineas, they grieved the soul of their father by their scandalous debauchery. Their intrigues with certain well-known Jewesses of light repute were a constant source of sorrow to the old man, and one night at the end of January, when the youngsters returned unusually late from a carousal with their companions, he ventured to expostulate with them. They replied by firing a couple of pistol shots at their father, who, being thoroughly alarmed by the attempt upon his life, fled in haste to the basha, who at once sent a file of soldiers to arrest the would-be parricides. There was a stiff resistence, but eventually the young Jews were captured and imprisoned. The next day they each received six hundred blows with the bastinado in the presence of their father. His wrath, however, was by no means quenched. Like other fathers who have to mourn the wickedness of unrepentant prodigals, his indignation grew hotter and hotter against the sirens whose charms had wrecked the virtue of his sons. He applied to the basha to arrest all the Jewish women of bad repute to whom he attributed his children's ruin. The basha called the Jewish sheikh, furnished him with a force of soldiers, and gave him a warrant to arrest every Jewess whom the Jew Amiel reasonably suspected of complicity in the ruin of the young Jews who had just been bastinadoed. The Jewish sheikh apparently nothing loath, took the soldiers, and that night hauled out of their beds the eight Jewesses whose suffering has horrified Europe. Of these eight one is declared to be a Jewish girl of unimpeached respectability, as, indeed, is not unlikely. A Jewish police des mœurs improvised in Morocco can hardly expect to escape the blunders into which the police charged with such duties constantly fall in more civilized lands. Of the other seven, they were, to say the least, no better than they should be. Next morning the whole eight were stretched flat in the market-place, face downward. A Moor held each hand, another stood upon their shoulders, and they were severely flogged by relays of soldiers. One of them is said to have gone mad during the process. When it was over the wretched women were bundled into jail, pending their expulsion from the town. The American vice-consul, himself a Jew, interfered, and they were released. That is the whole story: and a very disgusting and horrible story it is, but anything more absolutely different from "persecution" could hardly be imagined. The man Amiel was a Jew, his sons were Jews. The arrest was made by the Jewish sheikh at the suggestion of the Jew Amiel, and the punishment was inflicted on the Jewesses by the Moors solely at the request of the Jews. Whether Amiel is a fitting person to "represent" this country, even in the humble character of interpreter, is another question.—Pall Mall Gazette.

His Rich Joke.

The other day a baggage waggon brought a trunk to the Union Station which was labelled:

"Dynamite within—smash if you dare."

The trunk was closely followed by a young man who had about seven minutes to get his check and catch the train. When he presented his ticket and asked for a check the baggage-master replied:

"This trunk can't go as baggage."

"Why?"

"The contents are dangerous. You'll have to remove it from here at once or I'll make you trouble."

"But there is no dynamite within."

"There is the warning."

"Yes, but that was for a joke on the baggage-smashers."

"Young man, the G. T. R. never jokes. Get that trunk out of here!"

"Come, old fellow, it was only in fun," entreated the smart Aleck. "I have only four minutes to catch the train."

"If you do not remove that dangerous trunk I shall have to call an officer!" was the firm reply.

"I tell you it is not dangerous."

"Let me inspect it."

This was grudgingly acceded to, and nothing more dangerous than four shirts which sadly needed washing were discovered. By this time the train had departed, leaving the joker with eight hours on his hands, and as the trunk was returned he was handed a scraper and the advice:

"Young man, it might be safer for you to label yourself with something like: 'Perishable—no delay.' You are evidently too ripe for this section. Now scrape that sign off, or the trunk can't go!"

"Have you anything extraordinary on your person by which you could be identified?" asks an Austin doctor, who was examining Bil Colbert for a life insurance policy. Colbert thought for a good while before he answered. At last he replied that he had the required peculiarity. "What mark is it?" "Fearful cramps when I eat green corn."

THAT MINING BOOM.

Interesting Account of the Keewatin Co.'s Works.

Gold Galore—Progress of the Operations—The Winnipeg Mine—Chicago Capital Rushing In.

Mr. James F. Meagher, formerly of Kingston, now partner in a large mining concern in Winnipeg, writes as follows under date of March 13:

"We left Winnipeg at 8 30 p. m., and after four hours ride through a picturesque country we arrived in the bright little town of Portage. After doing the place in the vain hope of securing a team to draw us to the mines, but which was, we found, an impossible thing to do on account of the great demand for horses to carry exploring parties, we retired to dream over the tramp of ten miles that lay before us the next day. At 6 o'clock in the morning found us on the way for Hay Island, where the Keewatin Co.'s works are located. The scenery of the Lake of the Woods is simply grand. The countless islands that cover the lake are covered with majestic trees and shubbery, which creak and groan in the silent stillness under their load of ice and snow, designed by old Jack Frost in all imaginable shapes, and which glisten and sparkle in the bright sun like so many jewels. The crisp morning air, the deep white snow making a velvety carpet, with the pale blue heavens cloudless; the sun shining brightly like a huge globe of fire filled out the scene, while the occasional boom of a blast in the surrounding mines was all that disturbed the death-like silence, making the panorama the grandest by far of anything we had ever seen. Four hours steady walking brought us to the Keewatin camp. With sharpened appetites we did justice to a real miner's dinner, after which Superintendent Andrew Hamilton took us in hand.

ENTERING THE SHAFT.

"The first place visited was the main or No. 1 shaft, which is sunk to a depth of 65 feet, over which is erected a comfortable building, 24x30 feet. It is kept warm by a large stove which makes the place habitable in the most inclement weather. We were lowered to the bottom of the shaft in the bucket. The sensation experienced in the descent was anything but a pleasant one. If the rope was to break or anything to go wrong with the machinery there would be nothing left but mangled corpses and pools of blood. The good and bad deeds of one's life would pass in review in the brain in an instant, but before the bottom was struck we were landed safely on the bottom. Mr. Hamilton showed us a drift, which is about two feet wide, gradually increasing in width as it descends. Fine gold can be plainly seen by the naked eye and flour gold is distributed through the rock. The foot wall, as it is called in mining parlance, is at an angle of about 70° and is beautifully were polished; the hanging wall and the side walks are free from rock, showing the careful manner in which work has been has executed. Owing to the softness of the walls this shaft will be timbered, which is a great expense to the company, as one of the most difficult things upon the wrong side of the timbering. Mr. Hamilton informed us that sinking would be continued to a depth of one hundred feet before much. From there they would begin to drift and stope. What is meant by drifting and stoping, I know nothing of mining, following the vein in either direction upon a level, and stoping is taking out the pure vein matter. The quartz is generally known as auriferous and is said to be with a large percentage of gold. It is claimed to be free milling.

IMPROVEMENTS.

"Many improvements have gone on since the shafts: sufficient timber is now on the ground for the thirty stamp mill. A boarding house, 50x24 feet, is nearly completed. Another building, 24x30 feet and 16 feet in height, is occupied by the manager and foreman; it is commodiously appointed, being divided into office, assay office and sleeping apartments. A barn, store-room, blacksmith shop and the building at present occupied by the men, make quite a village themselves, and next fall will be equipped and well-appointed for working the immense ledge and follow the large output that the increased force of men will bring.

"We were attracted by the sound of blasting about two miles distant, and found that it was the blasting which we went. The shaft of this mine is down about seventy feet, but it is a long, dreary shaft, so Mr. Fred Hamilton, the superintendent, informed us. It is small for practical purposes. Meanwhile they are erecting a mill to work the ore already taken out, and are making the many necessary improvements in the way of boarding, etc. They will begin to sink their permanent shaft at once. On our way to town we paid a visit to the Pine Portage property, the "Whale," as it is called. Here two things are booming—buildings are being erected, and the enterprising timbermen are making the necessary pieces for the new mill which has been purchased from Messrs. Fraser & Chalmers of Chicago. Mr. Doby, of Toronto, one of the owners, informed us that they expected to be rushing in about two weeks. He also stated that his firm had paid $33,000 for the property, $12,000 down and the balance on the 1st of June. There are other companies in active operation, notably in Argyle. This company has erected a ten-stamp mill and will be crushing in about ten days. Being pressed out we will not visit any of the other properties. We were well satisfied with what we had seen, and were convinced beyond a doubt that there is gold in paying quantities in the Lake of the Woods, and all that is required is time and capital to demonstrate it. In Winnipeg, on the streets, in the clubs, and about the hotels, the whole topic of conversation is mining. Already several offices have been opened for the purpose of handling stocks. On Wednesday last the board of trade and stock exchange opened their doors to the public. This association has been organized in anticipation of a boom. They occupy the large two-story building in Thistle street, just vacated by James O'Brien & Co., wholesale clothiers. Those who are best advised on the subject say that a mining boon is fast approaching, which will eclipse, if possible, that which occurred here in lands a little more than a year ago.

LATE NEWS NOTES.

It is said the discussion on the affirmation bill will probably be postponed, owing to the opposition to the measure.

The Prime Minister of France has informed the President that the Government has decided to take energetic action in Tonquin with a view of establishing a protectorate.

The Madrid Government has decided not to enlarge the liberty allowed to Neceo, the Cuban refugee. They possess information that he intends to return to Cuba when liberated.

The Bishop of Bohemia has become so alarmed at the rapid spread of spiritualism that he has declared any one professing the belief in spiritualistic doctrines guilty of heresy.

Von Hobew Pasha, one of the able officers of the German army, who went to Constantinople to reform the Turkish army, has been appointed aide-de camp to the Sultan and Master of the Horse.

The Paris Figaro says that General Tribaudin's dismissal from public life is only adjourned. The Intransigeant says that the country relies on General Thibaudin's firmness to prevent the Republic from falling into General Gallifet's hands. It further says that the country's weakness is the signal for audacious reaction.

It is stated in St. Petersburg that the date of the coronation ceremony at Moscow may be put off until June. The date has been left blank in the invitations forwarded to foreign Powers. Precautions of all kinds are continually invented in the hope of thwarting the Nihilists.

The story of the Alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy against France, which is now generally looked upon as a feeler, has been made the occasion by the Italian press for many anti-French articles.

Socialist members of the Reichstag, supported by Progressists, have given notice that they will introduce a motion in regard to the arrests of Socialist Deputies.

Four other Socialists were arrested at Kiel with Herrs Vollmar and Frohme. The latter has also been released.

The entire left of the Reichstag will vote against the ministerial bill increasing the duties on wood.

The resistance of the Danes in Schleswig to the demands of Prussia that they serve in the Prussian military service is as strong as ever. Thirty have just been expelled from the country.

A petition from the president and faculty of Yale College, has been presented to the New York State Senate in favor of the Niagara Falls Park bill.

The Prohibitionists at Topeka, Kansas, have, probably, elected the mayor there.

The body of John Pierce, of Titusville, Pa., drowned on February 4th, was found by the Rev. Mr. Hoover recently. Mr. Hoover is a noted divine of the Methodist Church at Sunville, and had revealed to him through a dream the location of the corpse.

There has been no sitting of the Quebec Police Board for several months past, as the majority of the members refused to serve since the Courts declared they were not entitled to any remuneration for their services. A movement is now on foot to try and get the whole force under the management of the city corporation.

There is a rumor that the agents of Mr. Seneeal have already acquired the Island of Anticosti from the proprietors, for the purposes of colonization.

His Grace the Archbishop publishes in the Canadien a letter requesting owners of Catholic papers not to reproduce rumors of ecclesiastical changes unless authorized by competent parties. This is understood to apply particularly to recent rumors of the coming division of the Diocese of Three Rivers published in the press.

It is announced that Count de Puyjalon is likely to have the direction of the mineral and other exhibits of Canada to be exhibited in Paris.

The Government steamer "Newfield" with the Canadian exhibits for the London Fishery Exhibition, has sailed.

The New Brunswick steamship Company have failed in their efforts to contract with English builders for a new steamer to replace the "Cedar Grove." The company find that they cannot replace her for less than $200,000, and the purchase of a new vessel stands over for further advices.

In Case of Insurrection.

Among the papers lately distributed by the Party of Action in the soldiers' barracks at Paris are some which enables the young recruit to grasp the whole art of revolution down to the minutest details. There is one, for instance, which tells the revolutionary soldier what he ought to do immediately there is news of an insurrection. He must set fire to his barrack. To enable him to do this, he must make for where the straw and other inflammable matter may be lying. In any case, he must set fire to the matresses. For making a fire he must employ a compound, if it is at hand, of petroleum and alcohol, of petroleum simply, or use a candle, if no better means are available. When the fire has commenced to burn up, he must then turn on all the jets of gas in the corriders and appartments. In the midst of the confusion he must either force the officers to join the revolt, or slay the recalcitrants, so that not one shall remain standing. He must then join the people in the street, and help to burn the public buildings, beginning with the police offices. Besides alcoholized petroleum he should be furnished with a yet deadlier agent, which is petroleum essence saturated with white phosphorus.

Incidents of the Crimean War.

The valley of Varsutka and the forest of Baider were found to be unoccupied by any Russian detachment except a few Cossacks, who galloped away at sight of the enemy. In the night, however, outposts were placed to watch the French manœuvre, and ascertain its purpose. Capt. Symony, of the Sixth Regiment of Dragoons, being in command of a squadron on vedette duty, perceived a considerable body of Russian cavalry when the moon rose. It was detailing those outposts along the French line. He charged it, and almost entirely cut it to pieces with the sabre. Gen. Pelissier published a general order in praise of Capt. Symony, who also received the cross of the Legion of Honor for his gallant conduct. After this partial encounter the expedition returned to its camp without being attacked by the Russian troops on the Mackenzie Heights, as was expected. I had enjoyed the ride exceedingly, and my immediate chief, as well as the Ambassador, was glad to hear from me all necessary particulars of it. From the hills on each side of the valley of the Tchernaya, which formed a sort of neutral ground after this movement to clear it of detachments, the hostile armies could see each other distinctly without using field glasses. Communications were soon established between them by signals at the advanced posts. A French sentry would tie his pocket-handkerchief on his bayonet, and a Russian sentry would leave a bottle of vodka, or brandy, at the end of his beat. In the evening a comrade not on guard would go to the spot, and, taking the bottle, would put a couple of loaves of white bread in its place. This traffic was carried on with great mutual satisfaction until it became known to commanding officers of regiments, who suppressed it peremptorily. The soldiers were in the habit of seeing white flags raised, and staff officers of the opposed armies meeting amicably to transact whatever business might be on hand, and it was not surprising that they should try to follow the example for the settlement of their own little bargains. After long practice, the management of short armistices under flags of truce was reduced to a perfect system of friendly regularity. A white flag would appear on a rampart or a trench. Firing would cease on both sides. Heads would be raised from parallels and rifle-pits often not many yards distant from each other, and soldiers would see the enemy whom they had been firing at. No ill-feeling was ever shown on either side. They would even smile and nod to each other. The French would cut jokes, which, translated by some Russian officer, would be received by his men with shouts of laughter. Russian infantry soldiers were supplied with better boots for marching in mud and snow than those of the allied armies, who took every opportunity of procuring a good pair from the feet of a dead enemy on the field of battle. This became a jest in the international chats of an armistice. I remember once a diminutive young Russian officer holding up his well-booted foot, and calling out in broken English, with linguistic pride: "Come! Take!" A herculean Captain of the Black Watch replied, with his Highland bonnet in his hand, high in the air; "Accept a fair exchange. You would look better in this!" Much laughing resounded from trench to rifle-pit. When the respective staff officers had finished their conference and saluted each other courteously, they retired to their lines, the flags of truce were lowered, and firing was resumed in the batteries with as much virulence as ever. On one occasion two Sergeants, an Englishman and a Russian, had been making friendly signs to each other, when the truce suddenly ended; the Russian, still standing up inadvertently, would certainly have had at least one rifle-ball through his head if the Englishman had not delayed the fire of his men while he made various gesticulations to him to go down from the rampart, which he did with a wave of the hand in acknowledgment of his enemy's courtesy. —Temple Bar.

Fuel and Water on Ocean Steamers.

A correspondent asks for information as to the amount of water and coal consumed by an ocean steamer in crossing the Atlantic, and whether sea water is used for filling the boilers. Great changes have occurred in ocean steam navigation since the first Cunard steamer entered Boston harbor in 1840, by which the quantity of fresh water and coal required on a single voyage has been very much reduced. The introduction of the surface condensing process prevents the waste of steam which is now saved for continual service, and thereby greatly reduces the quantity of water needed. The Cunard steamer Atlas, of 2,393 tons, before leaving port fills her boilers with fresh water, their capacity being from 40 to 50 tons, and this quantity is generally sufficient to last through the voyage, but in case it runs short the distilling apparatus on board can make up the deficiency from sea water. For fuel she usually carries about 600 tons of coal, the daily consumption being from 35 to 40 tons, and the run across the ocean requiring about 400 tons. The Servia, the latest addition to this line, an immense steamer of 7,392 tons, requires about 175 tons per day, while the old Scotia, which was only about one-quarter the size of the new steamer, consumed from 150 to 175 tons daily. This great saving in coal is owing to the invention of the compound marine engine.—Boston Journal.

Dead in Her Lover's Arms.

Mary J. Cunningham, a young lady in the western section of Washington, died suddenly of heart disease recently, at the residence of her parents. A young man named John Collahan, to whom she was soon to be married, called during the evening. He remained until about 10 o'clock, when he started to leave. Miss Cunningham caught his arm, saying, "Please do not go yet." He turned with some gentle protestation, when he noticed that she was very pale and gasping for breath. He caught her in his arms and called for assistance, but in a few moments she was dead. Dr. H. L. E. Johnson, of the Columbia Hospital, was sent for and arrived promptly, but too late for his services to be of avail.

We believe in morality, but when a man becomes so violently opposed to gambling that he won't shake with the ague we feel like writing him down a fanatic, and turning our attention to other affairs.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

BARB WIRE FENCING.

Lyman Barb awarded first prizes at Exhibitions held at Montreal and Toronto, 1882, for Excellence in Quality and Make. It is made from the best of steel wire specially drawn for the purpose. Our facilities enable us to make the Lyman with barbs 4, 5, 6, or 7 inches apart as customers desire. The 4 and 5 inch barb wire is used principally for small stock, or lower wire on fence. The 7 inch make runs from 16 to 16 1-2 feet (one rod) to the pound. All of these are guaranteed equal in strength to any wire fencing made. Send for circular and prices to your nearest Hardware Agent, or to

DR. NASH

—OF—

"TORONTO PULMONARIUM."

20 years' experience in Ontario.

The following Letter speaks for itself.

DEAR DR. NASH,—I thank you for my present excellent health, after your successful treatment. Bronchitis, with a complete loss of voice, so prostrated and annoyed me, until after treatment with some of the most eminent medical talent, and without success, I resolved to avail myself of your services, and can now say that my health was never so well. I attribute my present good health to your system of inhalations, and constitutional remedies.

Sincerely yours, T. M. HENNESSY.

DYSPEPSIA & LIVER COMPLAINT.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer, every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use according'y and if it does you no good it will cost you nothing. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

What is a house without a baby? well comparatively quiet.

OH, WHAT A COUGH!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of 50cts., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your Cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves Croup, and Whooping Cough, at once. Mothers do not be without it. For Lame Back, Side, or Chest, use Shiloh's Porous plaster. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store Markdale.

THE KEYNOTE.—'Wife—let me in!'

ALWAYS UNDER ARMS—Crutches.

We have a speedy and positive cure, for Catarah, Diphtheria, Canker mouth and Head Ache, in SHHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY. A nasal Injector free with each bottle. Use it if you desire health and sweet breath. Price 50 cents. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truely a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Fever and Ague, Stomach. Liver and Kidney Complaints even when all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all.—Ezch.—Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

A sound suggestion—never turn a deaf ear to the telephone.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

A man's manners are not necessairly a criterion of his moral worth. The pickpocket is often a most polite rascal.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requsted to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

Whosoever lends a greedy ear to a slanderous report is either himself of a radically bad disposition, or a mere child in sense.—Menander.

McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and affection of the Liver, and from the immense sale of it without advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the marke, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents and one dollar. 127-40.

Church building in the United States has averaged 100 new edifices every year since 1868.

CALVERT'S CARBOLIC CERATE.

Try it for Chapped Hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises. It is a preparation of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate. It will cure any sore where all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs. 127-40.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEF BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132 84.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Last Saturday evening, about 9 o'clock, as Mr. Nathaniel Campbell was assisting in keeping the bridge and dam at Edge Mills clear of saw logs, he was suddenly thrown into the water by a pike which he was using sticking fast in a floating log, and was instantly swept over the dam and down the rapids. A companion heard a scream from the unfortunate man, as he fell into the water, since which time nothing has been seen of him, as it is impossible to recover the body until the river lowers. Mr. Campbell was about 60 years of age, and leaves a widow to mourn his decease.

On Sunday the river rose to an alarming extent and threatened the destruction of bridges and dams all of which in the vicinity of the town have been damaged to a great or less extent. The dam at McKechnies grist mill is badly broken and the bridge on Garafraxa st., had a very narrow escape, and if it had not been for the efforts of a number of the citizens who hauled stone and filled in the butments, would have floated off. The damage done by the freshet will be very considerable.

Priceville.

The Mill dam here was destroyed by the flood on Sunday, together with the small bridge below and a portion of the main bridge above. This will be a serious loss to Mr. McGowan who had his fine new grist mill with three run of stones ready to commence grinding the following day, and also to Mr. McLeod, (Saw mill), who will loose his season's work.

Flesherton Station.

The "Rail House" has again changed hands, and Mr. Downs, is now in charge.

Taylor, Speers, That the report of the clerk's interview with the manager of the Credit Valley Railway Co. with the view of getting the extension of said road through the township of Osprey be adopted.

To the Municipal Council of the Township of Osprey.

GENTLEMEN.—As instructed by motion of council of 20th of March, I had an interview with Mr. Osler, of the Credit Valley Railway Co. in his office at Toronto, respecting the extension of that line northward through this municipality, and have to report that the Company was much pleased to learn that the council and ratepayers of Osprey are favorable to the extension of their line northward from Orangeville. That at the present time the company is not prepared to undertake any of the branches this season as it is completing the main line from St. Thomas to Montreal. That next year it will be prepared to undertake the branch from Orangeville northward through this municipality to the Georgian Bay.

Your obedient servant,

WM. MILNE.

HIS SACRIFICE:

OR,

For Love of Her.

CHAPTER XL.—(CONTINUED.)

"You are not well, Russell," she said to him anxiously, "you do not act or look like yourself. Go and see the doctor, dear."

But he shook his head, saying to himself bitterly.

"If there was a doctor in the city who could cool the fever of remorse, could allay the pain of passionate regret, I would go to him."

Ah, if there was such a doctor, he would have more patients than he would know what to do with.

Of course there have been thousands of young engaged people just as happy as Louie and Roy were, only it seemed to them that there never could have been before such perfect happiness as theirs.

"There is not one thing to spoil it," said Louie triumphantly.

"And there never shall be," said Roy earnestly.

In her own heart Louie was quite positive that there was never before such a lover as Roy, such a dear, tender, thoughtful, strong lover; and Roy, for his part, was just as sure there never was before such a dainty, sweet, gentle, little maiden as this little maiden of his. Society was not nearly so much surprised when the engagement was announced as Muriel had supposed that august body would be; for long before Louie had thought of such a thing the young people of her "set" had begun to link her name and Roy's together. Everybody said they were perfectly suited to each other, and congratulations were showered upon them.

"Lucky fellow, that Glenmore," said Louie's masculine admirers—and their name was legion—regretfully, and to be truthful, somewhat enviously.

"Louie was very fortunate to win the love of such a magnificent fellow as Roy Glenmore," said her young lady friends, also a little regretfully, also somewhat enviously; "and they say he has a fortune in his own right, beside what that rich uncle of his will leave him."

But not one of all Louie's or Roy's friends was so perfectly delighted as was Mrs. Van Alstyne. Just as soon as that energetic little lady heard of the engagement she went to see Louie, and kissed and hugged her enthusiastically.

"You little darling," she said, "I hoped with all my heart you would fall in love with Roy—dear, splendid fellow that he is, and I was so afraid you wouldn't, although I did not see myself how you could very well help it when he loved you. Did I know he loved you?" as Louie looked up at her, questioningly; "why, of course I did"—laughing merrily—"didn't I see him fall in love with you the very moment I introduced him to you, the night of Maud Farnum's reception? Louie," and Mrs. Van Alstyne spoke earnestly now, her laughing eyes growing thoughtful, "there is not a nobler fellow in this whole city—or in any other city, for that matter, than Roy Glenmore, and I congratulate you, dear, most heartily, for I know that he will make you very happy; you will have a noble husband, Louie, and a true one."

Aline Brentwood, too, wished Louie joy, warmly and sincerely, but though she liked Roy very much, still she could not help wondering how Louie could have preferred him to Percy Evringham; for Percy was perfect in Aline's eyes, because, you see, she loved him; and when a woman loves a man, it is quite natural for her to think he is a little better in every respect than any other man in the world. Before he went back to Baltimore, after Louie had refused him, Percy, whose heart was very sore, had gone to see Aline, and had told her of his bitter disappointment, and dearly as she loved him, unselfish Aline would rather have seen him happy and light-hearted as Louie's accepted lover, than dejected and quite broken-hearted as he was. She tried to comfort him, to cheer him, to make him believe his life was not utterly ruined as he seemed to think it was; and, for all his broken-heart and blighted hopes, Percy was not insensible to being pitied and consoled by so beautiful and charming a girl as Aline.

"I shall think of you always as my dear sister, Aline," he said, mournfully, as he rose to go. "I wish you would write to me sometimes, I shall be so lonely now."

The dejected look upon the handsome Saxon face went straight to Aline's heart, and quite unconsciously she laid her hand in his.

"I shall be very glad to write to you, Percy: it will be a pleasure to me."

"He will never marry, nor will I," she said to herself, when he had taken his departure; "but I would rather be as he said his dear sister, than the wife of any other man in the world;" and the thought of the letters she would write him—the sisterly letters—brought a soft flush upon her face; and the soft flush was not quite consistent with the purely sisterly feelings Aline imagined she was for all time to entertain for Percy.

About three weeks after her engagement to Roy, Louie had met Richard Brandon—the man who was her father, and the meeting had in this wise come about: Much as he wanted to see his child—and only God knew how passionately he longed to see her—Russel Anthon felt that he had not the strength to again cross the threshold of his brother's house; he felt that he could not bear another meeting with either Muriel or Arundel; so although Roy urged him again and again to go with him, bringing him messages even from Muriel—once an invitation to dinner in the handwriting he so well remembered, and which made him faint and sick to see again—he shook his head always, saying. "I cannot go, Roy—never again into that house."

"I am so anxious to have you see Louie, Uncle Richard," said Roy one evening, "and she is so anxious to see you too. I have thought of a plan: Go with us to the theatre, I will get a box and you can see and talk with Louie just as you would in her home. Will you Uncle Richard?"

"Will I? yes indeed, Roy. Ah, you do not know how I want to see her."

How impatiently he waited for that evening to come; he had thought nothing could make that desolate heart beat quick and high again, yet as he walked along the street toward the theatre that night, it was throbing as it had throbbed years and years before at the touch of Muriel's small fingers, the pressure of her head upon his breast; and the thought of meeting his own child—his little daughter—brought a glad light into the tired, sorrowful eyes.

He did not hear Roy's voice as with fond pride he introduced Louie. He was blind and deaf to everything save the lovely face that was raised to his, the music of the sweet voice; and as he held her hand in his, heard her speak, felt her warm breath upon his face, it was as though the stone had suddenly been rolled away from the grave where long ago he had laid his happiness and the brightness of his life.

Roy wondered at the light that came into his eyes, the deep tenderness that softened his whole face. As for Louie, ah, the instincts of nature are wonderful; all her heart went out towards this man who was to her only Roy's uncle. He did not seem strange or unfamiliar to her, she could and did talk to him without a feeling of embarrassment.

"You will try and love me a little," he said to her before they parted that evening, speaking with a wistfulness she could not understand, and she answered, lifting her true eyes to his:

"I love you now, Mr. Brandon!"

In his sleep that night there was a smile upon Russel Anthon's face—the grief-worn face with its lines of bitter pain, and in his dream he murmured:

"My little daughter—my little Louie!"

After that he saw her many times; he went with them—Roy and her—to church, to the opera and the theatre. He sent her the most beautiful presents, he wept like a child over the dainty little notes she wrote him, but they were tears without bitterness—glad tears; she filled his life, his heart, his thoughts.

"Roy's uncle seems to think the world and all of Louie," Muriel said to Arundel. "Everything he gives her is of the costliest description; I never saw more elegant presents, I wonder why it is he will not come here; don't you think it rather strange, Russel?"

Did Arundel think it strange? No, no, nor did he wonder at Richard Brandon's love for Louie.

Spring went by, summer came. Louie went to Newport with her mother, and Roy managed to spend a great deal of his time there.

Was there ever such a summer before—such a bright, beautiful summer?—never to Louie or Roy certainly. All the summers that had gone before seemed to them like winters in comparison with this one.

The Anthons returned to the city in September; then for weeks how busy they were! Such shopping exhibitions, such consultations with dressmakers and milliners!

"I don't see what I want such a quantity of clothes for," said Louie, laughingly. "Why, Roy, it is positively startling, there are drawers full, boxes full, trunks full. I am so glad I shall never have to be married but once."

Muriel took far more interest in tha trousseau than the girl did. And what a trousseau it was! All her lady friends went into ecstasies over it! Then the cards were out, and the presents began to pour in.

"I don't see what we shall ever do with them all," said Louie; "between the presents and the clothes there won't be any room in the house for Roy and me."

"Is there anything they have not sent you, my darling!" asked Roy, as he looked at the glittering display of silver, bronzes, laces, jewels, and bric-a-bac.

"I don't think so," answered Louie. "Only think, Roy, five clocks and seven dozen silver butter-plates. Don't laugh, it is an awful thing to have seven dozen butter plates on your mind."

It was a very brilliant wedding; the church was packed. Aline Brentwood was one of the four bridemaids, and Percy Evringham had recovered from his disappointment sufficiently to enable him to assist as one of the ushers. Wondrously lovely was Louie in her gleaming bridal robes, and there was a look upon her face, as she went up the broad aisle, that told very plainly she was not thinking how the folds of her satin train hung, or wondering whether her veil was arranged becomingly.

No two people ever took upon themselves the solemn vows of matrimony with a fuller sense of their sacredness and purity than Roy and Louie did; and when they turned from the altar man and wife, the organ pealing out the wedding-march, there was a look upon both their faces which had as much of heaven in it as of earth.

Russel Anthon was at the church. He saw his daughter given in marriage to the man of whose magnificent manhood he had laid the foundations, whose mind he had formed, whose noble impulses he had drawn out and perfected. For Louie's sake, because she had wished it, and begged him to do so, he attended the reception at the house he had thought he could never again enter; and because of the new peace in his heart he was able to answer Muriel when she spoke to him in her sweet, gracious way, but he did not remain long, he knew his strength could be taxed only just so far.

When the gayety was at its height, Roy, and Louie went away. Husband and wife now, never to be separated, to walk together through life, hand in hand, heart to heart—one a part of the other.

CHAPTER XLI.

"It is early yet, Uncle Richard," said Roy.

"Yes, only a little past ten," murmured Louie, pleadingly. "Don't go yet, Uncle Richard, stay a little while longer."

A smile passed over Richard Brandon's worn face as he listened to them—a smile that, curving his lips, swept away, for the time being, the weary look of pain which for so many years had been stamped about his mouth; and the sorrow in his dark eyes was replaced for the moment by a great, deep tenderness as he laid his hand caressingly upon the small white one which Louie had laid upon his arm. They were his children—these two—and they loved him. Life had been hard and bitter to him, God knows; he had suffered as few men are called upon to suffer, he had sacrificed as few among us would have the strength to sacrifice; but the love of these children of his—as he called them—poured out upon him, went a long way toward healing the terrible wounds in his heart. They would never heal entirely, these wounds—never at least in this world; but they did not beat and throb with the same intolerable agony that they had been wont once to do, before he knew he was not a childless man.

"Well, just for a few moments, then," he said as he resumed his chair, and even his voice had lost the old ring of hopeless sorrow which for so long had been one of its characteristics.

"Uncle Richard never refuses to do anything I ask him," said Louie, merrily. "I think, Roy, Uncle Richard loves me a little."

"He would be a very strange person indeed if he did not," said Roy, looking down at his young wife with a world of tenderness in his eyes.

"I think you are a little prejudiced in my favor, Roy," murmured Louie, with a low laugh of pure gladness; then after a moment's pause she continued: "Next year this time we shall be in our own house; how lovely that will be; and then, Uncle Richard, you can't say when ten o'clock comes, 'Well, I guess I will go home now:' for our home will be your home then—and oh, how happy we will all be!"

"Am I to presume, Mrs. Glenmore, that you are not altogether happy now?" asked Roy, with mock gravity.

She lifted her face to his; her lips were smiling, but her eyes—well, they were smiling too, but there were never eyes so full of love and tenderness, and the happiness that comes of loving and being loved, as those soft eyes of hers.

"Do I look very happy, dear?"

For answer he bent and kissed her. The fair face flushed under his caress, for though he was her husband, he was her lover still; and the time would never come when Louie would be indifferent to Roy's kisses. And Richard Brandon, watching them, said to himself.

"Thank God, she loves him—loves him as much as he does her!"

They had been married now two months. Roy and Louie, and though it is said there is no such thing as perfect unalloyed happiness in this world, both Roy and Louie would have earnestly disputed it, had that rather melancholy statement been made in their hearing; this thing is quite certain, their happiness was so nearly perfect that no earthly eyes could have discovered any flaw in it; and if there was any happiness greater than that of being Roy's dear wife Louie did not care to know anything about it.

Since their return from their wedding trip, they had been boarding on Fifth Avenue, only a few blocks below Louie's old home, where they intended remaining until the early summer, when they thought to go abroad for a few months; then in the fall they were to go into the house which Mr. Trowbridge was building for them upon the lot of ground which had been his wedding prosent to Louie. Richard Brandon had wanted to give them their home. Was it strange that this man, whose own home had been stolen away from him, would have found a happiness, halt sad, wholly tender, in planning and building the house which would be his daughter's home? But Mr. Trowbridge had made up his mind that Louie's home should be a present from him, and Graham Trowbridge at sixty-five was not different from what he had been at twenty, in this respect: that when he made up his mind to anything it was utterly impossible to change his determination.

"It's no use, Brandon, to talk to me," he said, half seriously, half in jest. "I have always said that when Louie was married I should give her a house to live in; why I have been saving that lot for her for years. I might have sold it a hundred times over. You must remember, Brandon, that she is my only grandchild."

And a little bitterly Richard Brandon said to himself, while under his gray mustache his lips quivered:

"She is my only child—yet I cannot give her her home."

But he begged to furnish the house for them, and to that request Mr. Trowbridge acceded; and Richard Brandon filled many of his lonely hours—hours which otherwise would have been filled with bitter memories, with thoughts of the beautiful things with which he would fill his children's home. For years it had been his custom to walk through the streets, with head a little bent, and eyes that looked only straight before him; but now he looked into the store windows as he passed them; paused when his eyes fell upon a beautiful picture; a choice bit of bric-a-brac, a piece of antique furniture, saying to himself, "Louie would like that," or, "I will get that for Louie, it will be pretty in her boudoir, or library, or parlor," as the case might be. When he went by a florist's and saw great masses of flowers, he stepped in and ordered the rarest and choicest ones for her; and when he discovered her liking for bonbons he bought her huge boxes of them, and laughed—he, whose noble heart had been almost crushed by weight of pain—when she merrily insisted upon his taking those she picked out for him with her own little fingers, because, to use her own words, "they were particularly lovely ones; and if she allowed him to select for himself he made it a point to take the worst ones he could find."

And all these were little things, the merest trifles in the world; yet they were helping to raise him out of his hopeless despairing misery, bringing a gleam of sunshine into his darkened life. Day after day Louie grew deep and deeper into his heart,—she was always in his thoughts; her face came between him and his books, it filled his dreams, and where he had been wont to moan with breaking heart, "My lost Muriel," he murmured now with a tender smile upon his lips. "My little Louie—my own little daughter."

It was nearly eleven o'clock when he left Roy and Louie, and as he walked down the avenue—for he was still an inmate of Mrs. Deming's pleasant house—he was thinking of them, thinking with prayerful gladness how happy they were, how dearly and truly they loved each other.

"Thank God for it," he said to himself; "thank God for all the husbands and wives who love each other and are true—the one to the other."

Then his thoughts went slipping back to time he had first seen Roy: the little golden haired boy, whose innocent love he had always thought had alone kept him from sinking into the black despair which wastes the body, paralyzes thought and action, and like a quicksand, in time drags its victim down to death. And further back yet went his thoughts, as he walked along with the stars shining above him in the vast blue meadows of heaven. Clearly in his memory rose his first meeting with Roy's father, the grave, stately man with the high-bred patrician face, who had called himself Henry Glenmore. Ah, how well he remembered it, as though it had been months instead of long weary years before. How he was toiling along toward Guaymas worn and footsore, tired and weak, yet his heart beating high with hope, thinking he was on his way to Muriel; and just as the sun was rising above the mountains, throwing a flood of rosy light upon the plains, he had come up with the man, whom in such a short time he had learned to love, and who had died in his arms.

Would the time ever come when it would be right and necessary for Roy to know the story of his father's life? Ah, it was a strange story, and the people who had thought it very odd that Roy Glenmore knew little or nothing about his family, would be surprised indeed if they knew what blood it was that flowed in his veins.

He did not feel like retiring when he reached home; his room was bright and warm, and sitting down before the fire he took up one of the newspapers that lay upon the table, and began to look through the columns, reading a little here and there.

Suddenly a low exclamation escaped him; sitting upright in his chair, he grasped the paper firmly in both hands, and an expression of the most intense interest settled upon his face as he read:

"A THOUSAND POUNDS REWARD.—To any one who can give correct and satisfactory information regarding one Cyril Fairleigh, who it is supposed went to America in the year ——, and lived there under an assumed name. Any person having any knowledge whatsoever of said Cyril Fairleigh or his heirs, will communicate at once with Messrs. Gresham & Barham, Solicitors, Lincoln's Inn, London, England."

Once, twice, he read over that paragraph, then he rose from his chair. In one corner of the room stood a small iron safe; this he unlocked and from it he took a box. It was the box Henry Glenmore, on his death-bed, had given into his care—the box he had guarded so carefully all these years—the box which held the secret of Roy's birth. Lifting the lid he disclosed various bundles of time-yellowed letters and papers, carefully sorted and tied up, and his hands trembled a little as he drew out two papers—more precious than all the rest—and unfolded them. One was a marriage certificate, the names of the contracting parties being Cyril Fairleigh and Lilian Forsyth; the other was a certificate of Roy's birth. Before Richard Brandon laid his head on his pillow that night he had written a long letter to Messrs. Gresham & Barham, the London solicitors.

CHAPTER XLII.

In due time Richard Brandon received an answer to his letter; again he wrote and again came a letter from the London lawyers: and the day after the receipt of that second letter he told Roy and Louie that he had business which made it necessary for him to go at once to England.

"To England!" echoed Louie, in great surprise, "and how long will you be gone, Uncle Richard?"

"Not longer than I can help—probably not over six weeks."

"And why can't Mr. Disbrow go instead of you?" asked Louie, thinking the matter which was calling him abroad had something to do with the great wholesale business which he and Mr. Disbrow carried on.

A grave smile passed over his face as he answered her:

"Mr. Disbrow could not transact the business that is taking me to England, dear. When I come back I will tell you all about it, Louie. What shall I bring you from London?"

"You are always thinking what you shall bring me, dear Uncle Richard," she said tenderly; then with a little laugh she told him two or three things she would like to have.

"I am getting jealous," said Roy, laughingly. "What are you going to bring me, Uncle Richard?"

Again that grave smile curved Richard Brandon's lips.

"I shall bring you—something, Roy," he answered quietly; and little did Louie or Roy himself suspect what that something was to be.

That was Thursday; the following Saturday Mr. Brandon sailed, taking with him to England the box Henry Glenmore had left in his care.

Both Louie and Roy missed him very much after he had gone.

"I never thought I would love any one outside of my own family as dearly as I do him," Louie said to Roy, one day when they were speaking of him. "If he was your own father, Roy, I could not think more of him than I do;" and with a little sigh she wondered to herself whether it was wrong for her to have for Richard Brandon a love and tenderness such as she had never been able to feel for her father. For it was indeed so; she felt not the slightest restraint with Roy's; uncle she was perfectly at ease with him, could talk to him in her own pretty, graceful fashion, could ask his advice and opinion; while her father—or rather the man she thought was her father—had always chilled her; she could never be her own sweet, loving, impulsive self in his presence.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Mr. Hugh Sutherland, M. P., has received advices from his shanties on the Rainy River to the effect that small-pox was creating sad havoc among the Indians who had crossed from Minnesota into Canadian territory. Some three hundred of the redskins are reported to have died. Some two hundred men now employed in Mr. Sutherland's shanties have, for the cause given, struck work and are now on their way to Portage la Prairie. This will seriously interfere with the firm's operations.

Leaves.

The leaf is the essential and really part of the ordinary vegetal organism: at once the mouth, the stomach, the the lungs, and the whole vital of the entire plant. Indeed, from strictest biological point of view every must be regarded as to some extent individual organism by itself, and the the head must be looked upon as an or colony of such separate units bound gether much in the same way as a group coral polypes or the separate parts sponge in the animal world. It is therefore, that so little attention, tively speaking, should have been given the shapes of the foliage in various "The causes which have led to the forms of leaves," say Sir John Lubbock "have been so far as I know, explained very few cases." Yet the origin of so beautiful and varied natural shapes is worth a little consideration from evolutionary botanist at the present the more so as the main principles must guide him in his search after causes are simple and patent to inquirer. The great function of a leaf absorption of carbonic acid from the air its deoxidation under the influence of light. From the free carbon thus obtained together with the hydrogen liberated the water in the sap, the plant manufactures the hydro-carbons which form the mass its various tissues. Vegetal life in the or green plant consists merely in such dation of carbonic acid and water, and rangement of their atoms in new forms, plying the reception of external energy this external energy is supplied by sunlight. — Grant Allen, in Nature.

Something Odd About Sponges.

When first pulled from the rocks where grows the sponge looks like a corrugated mass of putty. It is drab in color, exceedingly heavy, has a sickening odor, and is fused by a stringy mucus which drops it in long viscous lines. The external are partly closed up by a sort of sea which finds refuge in them, and must be annoying interloper to the sponge-builder while often a red sea worm an inch or two length is found far within the spongy fibers. whither he has worked his way, the exact function of the mucous fluid not yet appear to be clearly settled. It is certain that when taken from the and placed on still bottoms, new are propagated from it; and if two of the same living sponge, or of sponges of the same species, are laid side by side on the sea bottom, they soon grow together. The vitality of the sponge, fact, coupled with the decrease of supply, suggests that ere many years artificial propagation may have to be

Millions of hard earned dollars have paid for stocks which are based upon angible evidence of value and were is-bare cost of location, and so-called mines ich were purchased for fifty dollars, have made the basis of a stock issue of tens thousands of shares and a capitalization millions. In hundreds of instances "the pany" have never even worked the an-l assessment on their claims and never

Millions of dollars are thus lost, and one should never be touched and none should purchase stock of any description unless the promoters of the mine are well known as honorable dealing and good business men of repute. The Mining Stock Register and Journal of Finance, of New York, in its recent published list of good mining companies, in its mercantile-like classification, rates the Keewatin and Lake Winnipeg mines "as capable of being made paying properties, at present but partially developed. Prospects are considered very good it sufficient money is expended and the managers perform their duty."

MINES IN LITIGATION

LAKE WINNIPEG.

So little has been said of the mines in this section and of the mineral resources of the island in this lake. Messrs. Anderson and Guest, the known-all-the-world-over prospectors, and who really discovered the mineral wealth of the Lake of the Woods district, says: Lake Winnipeg is the rival (and a great one) of the Lake of the Woods. Gold, silver, hematite, iron, ochre and soapstone are among the minerals of this region, and so far only one company has been formed and has quietly gone into active operations, viz., The Lake Winnipeg Mining Company, who are working a splendid vein on Big Island, near the east shore of the lake their quality assaying from $175 to $300 to the ton in gold, and a small percentage of silver. It was the stock of this mine worked in the wooda like a dark horse that found so much favor among the English speculators, and whose syndicate purchase of 10,000 shares sent the value of the stock of the concern $1.00 per share higher. The shaft of this mine is down 125 feet with drifts, and a new gang of men has just reached the works. In all the concern looks like a little village clustered away in the woods, as the three gangs, working night and day, keep up the stir and make the frequent discharge of giant power echo long and often.

WITH MAGNIFICENT RESULTS,

Forestry in Canada.

The government of the province of Ontario, comprehending that, although 120,000,000 acres of primeval forest still exist within its territory, the replacing of its timber supply for future needs will depeud upon the wise provisions made now, has had under consideration a bill providing for the payment of a bounty out of the public treasury for the planting of trees along farm boundary lines and by the sides of roads. The bounty proposed is not very large, the maximum sum being 25 cents for each tree, but it is quite enough to make it worth while for farmers to preserve and transplant the young saplings which they find in the way of their agricultural operations, and a moderate annual expenditure would in the course of years produce results of immense importance. A little calculation will show that if the highest bounty were paid in all cases, a subsidy of $50,000 per annum would at the end of three years represent 600,000 young trees; or, supposing one out of every six to die, half a million of growing saplings, which, if planted only along the roads, thirty feet apart, would line them on both sides for a distance of 1,420 miles. Continued for fifty years, the same subsidy would have led to the planting of 10,000,000 trees, worth on an average $5 apiece, all belonging to the persons who were paid for setting them out, but bringing in, nevertheless, to the public treasury in the form of taxes, supposing these to be reckoned at the moderate rate of 1 per cent., $500,000 a year, or ten times the amount of the outlay. This is, of course, a rather summary way of calculating profits, but there is certainly reason for believing that in Ontario, and still more in this country, a movement of the kind suggested would be very judicious.—American Architect.

Science and Religion.

Would you expect to find among the Red Indians of Newbrasks a conflict between science and religion? One of Gen. Grant's Quakers (Thos. C. Batty) reported officially in 1873 that he was a victim to such a conflict. He had a promising school of twenty-two Indian children in a tent near Fort Sill. All was going well, when a few of the pupils were taken sick, and some Indians from a neighboring tribe pointed a finger at the amiable Quaker and said: "He is Bad Medicine; it is he who is making the children sick." It broke up the school. That was in the wild West; but I can match the incident in my own experience. When I was 23 years of age I had a little school in Philadelphia of about twenty-two boys, and one morning, after many months of internal anguish, I began the school by saying these words: "Heretofore this school has been opened by reading a few verses of the Bible and a short prayer. Hereafter the prayer will be omitted." In six months it broke up the school; other causes conspired, but this was the direct and controlling cause. I made no explanation either then or afterward. I did not say, as I might have said: "I have come to think prayer an immoral practice, injurious, impious." I simply refrained from doing an act which I clearly saw was wrong for me to do. I was Bad Medicine. My dear little school came to an end, as it ought; for the parents, believing as they did, were amply justified in removing their boys.—James Parton.

A Strange Child.

The birth of an eccentric child in Turkish Kurdistan is announced by the Djarbehir newspaper. The infant, who is an object of interest not unmingled with alarm to all the neighborhood, was born with a beard and moustache, thirty-two teeth, and with no fewer than forty distinctly formed fingers. Its behavior from the moment of its birth has been far from satisfactory. It is excessively noisy and violent, and, owing to the cruel bites it inflicts on all who come within reach of its mouth, it has been found necessary to extract all its front teeth.

The Royal Surname.

No more popular delusion exists than in regard to the Queen's surname. People generally believe it to be Guelph. There are some, however, who know that, in marrying Prince Albert of Cobourg-Gotha, the sovereign took the surname of her husband, Wettin, which has for upward of 450 years been the family cognomen of the house of Saxony. And the Prince of Wales and all the rest of her children bear that name.

Female Hallucinations.

Recent circumstances [the case of Lady Florence Dixie] have directed attention to certain remarkable delusions to which females of unstable nervous equilibrium are subject, either through hysteria or through similar disorders of the nervous system. Charcot and Bourneville give instances of extraordinary self-deceptions that are frequent among hysterical patients. Dr. Legrand du Saulle, physician to the Salpetriere, Paris, describes in his standard work, "Les Hysteriques," some remarkable cases of hullucination, where females labored under the belief that they had been struck or stabbed by others, even after having inflicted blows and wounds upon themselves. In one instance a young women was found by her husband lying on the floor of her room in a fainting fit, her face covered with blood. On reviving from her swoon she stated that she had been the Paris newspapers related the case, and within three weeks two similar events occurred in the French metropolis. All these cases proved to be fabricated by the supposed victims. A young girl wounded herself slightly with a pistol. She gave the police authorities the most minute details about an imaginary assassin, who, according to her account, fired the weapon, but she was found to be highly hysterical, and it was proved that she had willingly wounded herself. In a third case in Dr. du Saulle's experience, a young woman was found in a railway carriage, stabbed in the left side. The incident caused great excitement, but it was proved, contrary to her assertions, that she had inflicted the wound herself, and was a hysterical subject. A house-maid was found lying behind a door, bound, gagged, and covered with bruises. She stated that she had been brutally attacked by two burglars with blackened faces, but she was and there appears to have been strong evidence that she had contrived to tie her own hands, and to gag and bruise herself. Perhaps the strangest case of all occurred in M. Tardieu's practice. A young lady residing at Courbevoie, wished to make herself an object of public interest by passing as a victim of a political conspiracy, which she pretended to have discovered. One night she was found in a state of the greatest mental perturbation at the door of her apartment. She could not talk, but stated in writing that she had been attacked outside her own house by a man, who had attempted to garrote her, at the same time striking her twice with a dagger. Only the lady's clothing was injured, and the body of her dress, and her corset were found to be cut through, but at different levels. She tried to make out that the attempt at strangulation had caused dumbness. M. Tardieu remarked in her hearing that this infirmity rapidly disappeared when produced under circumstances of this kind. She soon managed to regain her speech, and in a short time admitted that the whole narrative had been developed out of her inner consciousness Eccentricity in relatives is ever strongly presumptive of self-deception when a female makes any statement or charges of ill-treatment of any kind. The constant fear of assassination, especially if based on reasonable grounds, is particularly liable to predispose nervous or excitable subjects to extraordinary delusions of this kind.—From the British Medical Journal.

The Great North-West.

This North-west territory, at last reclaimed from the hunter and trapper, is large enough to give Canada half a dozen or more provinces as productive as any of the Western States. On its prairie lands can be raised better wheat and roots than in Illinois and Iowa; this, too, year after year, probably for 20 years, without the use of manures, as the experience of the old settlers of the Red River Valley has conclusively proved. The wheat produces sounder flour than that of Illinois or Indiana, and the soil is easily tilled all over the prairie region. As the tourist travels day after day over these rich lands his eye becomes perfectly wearied with the monotony of the "endless sea of verdure," only broken at intervals by the muddy shallow streams and lakes that, for the most part, water the region. But monotonous as seems the landscape, it represents to the practical eye a vast heritage of comfort and wealth. Here the settler can, with a very little labor, raise his crops, and avoid all the toil of clearing the forest, which is one of the troublesome features of pioneer life in the old provinces. The most valuable districts of the territory are watered by the Red, Assiniboine, Saskatchewan, and Pearce Rivers; and many years must elapse before the rich lands can be exhausted, even if the tide of immigration flows into the country with the same rapidity as it has poured for several decades of years into the Western States. Where the prairie lands end stretches a rolling country toward and up the slopes of the Rocky Mountains, where herds of cattle can be raised far more profitably than in the states to the South; and there have been already established in that section several large "ranches," the beginning of a productive industry, in view of the yearly increasing demand for animal food for exportation. One fine province has already been carved out of the territory, and others will soon follow as the necessity arises for proviucial organization.—Blackwood's Magazine.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

MARKDALE, APRIL 12TH, 1883.

INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPERS.

The Elesherton Advance takes us to task last week for presuming to say anything in favor of independent or non-political papers. It is very seldom we have to read so much for the same quantity of information as is necessary in the Advance, the most of people say something when they speak, but the Editor of the Advance can devote half a column with the greatest of ease without making a point either for himself or against another. He does not appear to understand the meaning of the word non-political, and therefore thinks we are becoming independent; well we must say it is not a very severe charge, so we will allow him his opinion, while we are not changed in ours. Then he tries to make light of the morality of the STANDARD, it would appear from the tone of his remarks, and from the course pursued by his paper that to be moral we should be everlastingly hurling Anathema's against those who may differ with us in opinion, we cannot see it in that light and have yet to hear from any source except the Advance the moral tone of the STANDARD questioned.

THE FIRE RECORD.

DESTRUCTIVE INCENDIARY CONFLAGRATION AT OWEN SOUND.

OWEN SOUND, April 15.—The most destructive fire that has ever occurred in this town took place this morning. At about 4:30 a.m. fire was discovered in Butchart's block, Poulette street, east. When first observed it was burning fiercely between the butcher shop of Robert Wylie and the photography gallery of George Holmes. At the time the fire broke out a heavy wind was blowing from the south. At one time it was feared that the entire block from Baker street to Divison street would fall a prey to the flames,

THE SUFFERERS.

Butchart's block was occupied by the following parties:—John Waits, machinist; J. Crosby, oyster saloon; W. Bullyment, barber; John Wright & Co, flour and feed store; John Coats, harness shop; Robt. Wylie, jr., butcher; Geo. Holmes, photographer; Jesse Ward, groceries; James Jackson, barber; Estate of G. M. Butchart, hardware; Mrs. Wm. Harrison, flour and feed; James C. Oatts, billard parlor; Donald McPhee, barber; W. K. Ireland, stationer; all of which were totally consumed. Besides the extensive block owned by the Butchart Estate the boot and shoe store of Mr. John B. Smith wrs also destroyed. The fire was got under control about six o.clock, and was stopped in its ravages by McLaughlan's brick confectionery establishment. All of the buildings destroyed were wooden with the exception of the one occupied by Harrison and Oatts, which were fine three storey double stores. So intense was the heat at one time that the cornice of the new Phœnix Block, opposite the burning block, took fire and considerable damage was done to the building. The fine plate glass windows in Stephen's hardware store and Creighton Bros. dry-goods store were completely destroyed, and considerable damage was done to the stocks by fire and water. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

LOSS AND INSURANCE.

The total loss on buildings and stocks will be about $50,000, and is covered by insurance to the amount of something like $30,000.

FIRE IN DUNDALK.

THREE BUILDINGS DESTROYED.

On Tuesday morning about 2 o'clock a fire broke out in the building recently owned by W. L. Marshall but now owned and being fitted up for a hotel by a Mr. Brodericks, this building was totally destroyed together with a frame one owned by Jas. McMillar and occupied by Smith & Demy as bakery and dwelling, and W. J. Hicks dwelling, and Humphrey's building occupied by Humphrey as dwelling and cabinet shop and J. Connor, as Grocery and Liquor store and dwelling. the total loss will not be less than $4,000 it was with great efforts that Gardiners Hardware across the street was saved. The origin of the fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR—Having read Observer's letter published in a recent issue, I must say if it is not interesting it is certainly amusing, especially to those who are acquainted with the writer. This gentleman, who is a Mr. B——, residing on the Meaford Road, has lately been transacting some business with what is know as Club 13, (headquarters Chicago.) And although he lost considerable money in the transaction, yet he has become so much improved, morally and intellectually, that he looks down on not only me, but on the leading farmers of this part of the country, as deplorably ignorant. Now, as I know Observer well, I would respectfully ask him to write over his own signature in future, then innocent parties will not be blamed for his ungentlemanly language and groundless assertions. As the public has read both his letter and mine, and as I well know the readers of your paper to be an intelligent people well able to judge for themselves. I shall content myself with briefly pointing out some things he says are fallicies in connection with the position I took. As the reader will well remember the letter written by me in the past winter, which has taken Mr. B. so long to brood over, was purely and simply advocating the periodical importation through our Provincial Government, of seed spring wheat and barley, such seed as we have already found to be most suitable to our soil and climate, and as the matter was well discussed by our leading farmers in January last, I therefore do not stand alone in that dreadful and deplorable ignorance in which Observer vainly tries to place me.

Now, in the first place, he says governments are easily approached, farmers get everything they demand in reason. As a proof that this is not so, I beg leave to call the attention of your readers to the financial reports of the different municipalities interested in the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, they will there learn the sums paid to Reeves and deputy Reeves, sent time after time as deputations to wait on the Ontario Goyernment, there to urge the claims of the company and the ratepayers, and all they ever got for this trouble and expence was an acknowledgement of the importance of the road and that it would receive the consideration of the Premier. Now sir, we consider there was a good deal of uphill work here that our representatives were put in a very humiliating position, begging, as it were, for what was the just rights of the company and the people, but withheld by the Government of Ontario. He speaks of my wonderful ideas of a thermometer, lactometer, creamometer, and specific gravity bottles. Now, I do say and know and can prove that the instruments referred to are used for the purpose of testing the quality of milk or cream, and as I do not like to see Observer's mind so much clouded, if he comes to me I shall explain their use and many other matters of interest he never knew. Or if he thinks proper to read I would respectfully refer him to the report of the Ontario Agricultural College of 31st December, 1880, on page 452 of annual report of Commissioner of Agriculture and Arts of same year. Regarding these three Government creameries spoken of let them have them that want them. I with thousands of others have no faith in their being a general benefit to the farming community. I only mentioned them in my letter for the purpose of contrasting the great benefits to be derived from the importation of seed grain in preference to them, and that the Agricultural College has not been a benefit to the country generally, nor in any shape has it been a benefit equal to the expenditure, nor can the good resulting from these institutions ever, in my opinion, be of as much good to the general public as the importation of the seed grain referred to. for I hold Sir, that public money should be expended as much as possible in the interests of the whole, and this can be fully carried out in the matter of seed grain. Further, in reference to butter I will quote Observer's own figures. He says there is about 30,000,000 pounds of butter marketed in Ontario annually, on this he seems to put a discount of five to ten cents per pound on account of it being home made. Now Sir, while I repudiate the idea of any man trying to establish it as a fact that we have no good butter makers in the country. I am well prepared to give such statement a flat denial. Observer's own mother and hundreds and thousands of farmer's wives and daughters in Ontario are well fit to make butter to compete with any butter making institution that has ever been in use, only give them the requirements less the creameries spoken of, and what the said crameries cannot supply, that is to say the right kind of cattle, proper food, good pasture, good water and good facilities for gathering and churning milk and sealing up the vessels that the butter is stored in, and keeping it free from all kinds of filthy odors. Now, regarding seed grain, Observer agrees with me in this except the mode of getting it as proposed by agricultural societies and myself. He objects to the Government being called upon to assist and says they would have to pass laws and suffer great loss and would get abuse. Now Sir, this assertion is simply absurd, the Government has only to decide that they will procure the seed, then appoint responsible parties to take orders accompanied with cash, Let these parties give notice that they are prepared to take orders accompanied with cash, the farmers could then send in their orders stating the name of seed grain required and the quantity. The grian could be all shipped in new cotton bags and sold to the parties getting it at cost. When orders were sent in for one car load, more or less, it could be sent for. Now, I ask what risk the the Government would have to run or what loss would they have to sustain. Now, regard Mr. B's imputation to myself and his objections to the resolutions unanimously carried at public meetings by respectable and intelligent farmers and who have in private conversation expressed themselves to be in accord with me on the subject of seed grain referred to, I now leave the intelligent reader to judge.

With the sincere desire of seeing the country prosper, I with thousands more are advocating a remedy for a great want. The Government of Ontario have taken the hint and have already made provision for supplying the farmers of Ontario with seed grain. But I have authority for stating it will not be on hand for spring seeding of this year. As it is to be imported from Russia and Egypt. Now Sir, is it not the old saying that "Empty vessels are sounding boards" well verified in Observer. Although he made a great fuss, he has not, he cannot, and I defy him to show wherein I wrote anything unpatriotic or unbecoming to a man who wishes to see the farming community prosper. Of course he crowded his letter with a lot of stuff that I never alluded to therefore I scorn to take any further notice of it I would, in conclusion, advise Observer to judge the writing of other men fairly in future, and to read before he writes.

Yours truly,
THOS. KELLS.

MAMMOTH
Spring Opening
—AT THE—
MAMMOTH HOUSE
MARKDALE.

While presenting our compliments to our hosts of customers and the public at large, we desire to make our very best bow in acknowledgment of the liberal patronage we have received since opening in Markdale, and having passed through a most successful winter campaign, the results of which have surpassed our most sanguine expectations, and so contributed to the consolidation of our commercial basis that we are now better than ever prepared to offer our patrons facilities the equal of which have never before been placed within the reach of the public of this section of country.

Our stock which is already exceptionally large and well assorted is being daily augmented by fresh arrivals of Spring Goods. Our stock of Boots and Shoes just opened out and now selling like wild fire cannot be beat in the county, and we respectfully invite an inspection by an intelligent public.

MR. TRIMBLE is now on the market for the purpose of personally selecting such goods as are best calculated to suit this section of the country, and neither pains or expense will be spared in order to place before our customers such a spring stock (when complete) as will astonish and please, and at prices that cannot fail to suit.

Having been thoroughly traind to the business from childhood, and having enlisted our whole interest and attention towards making it a success, and being thoroughly acquainted with the section of the country in which we are placed, we flatter ourselves that we understand something of the wants of the people and also how to buy so as to be able to sell at such prices as will convince the most sceptical. Our motto is—A LARGE BUSINESS ON SMALL PROFITS—on a cash basis, avoiding the necessity of charging good customers extra to make good our losses by bad debts. We are prepared to prove to the satisfaction of every man that the old credit system is not only false in principle ruinous, alike to merchant and customer. Selling for cash we can buy for cash and turn our money over and over, thus securing to our customers goods at prices which we could not buy them wholesale on the old system and to ourselves the satisfaction of a prosperous business on a safe footing.

An inspection of our Stock is respectfully invited. No trouble to show goods, being desirous of an opportunity to convince you that we do not advertise for the sake of puffing, but are in a position to back up all our assertions with solid facts.

Wind is cheap but not lasting, while truth is indisputable, and in business integrity and honor will win in the end while boastful admiration will fall behind.

To our old customers we would say that we are prepared to surprised even you in quantities, and qualities and prices while to those who have not yet discovered the advantage of giving us a call we would present a cordial invitation to compare our stock and prices with what they have been used to in the past.

In Windsor, Ont., on Monday evening, a bloody affray took place in the street between five drunken desperadoes from Detroit and a couple of police officers, backed up by a dozen citizens. Knives were used freely, and finally revolvers drawn. A Windsor constable was fatally injured, and half a dozen of those assisting him more or less hurt, one colored man probably fatally also. Three of the roughs were captured and locked up.

We are pleased to seee our village police commence operations so early in the season, they having already repaired some of our sidewalks and we hope they will continue until all are in good repair, and also complete the sidewalk to the station, this is a portion in which every citizen is more or less interested, and while each has to bear a portion of expense they will doubtless desire to have the use of this very important section as early in the season as possible.

Off the track.—The afternoon train on the G. T. R. while proceeding from Mount Forest to Durham on Friday, met with an accident when near Holstein by which the baggage car was thrown from the track and the passenger coach dammaged although it did not leave the track. A cow was the cause of the mishap. A number of Mount Foresters were on the train at the time, among the number Mr. Thos. Swan, Mrs. Millward and the Misses Roberts. It is needless to they were considerably shaken up. Mr. Roberts, of the Queens', sent up a team and brought his daughters and the other Mount Forest passengers home. —Mt Forest Advocate.

REVEREND WILLIAM STOUT.

A Sufferer for 23 Years—An Interesting History of His Case.

In the autumn of 1859 an indolent, painless swelling was observed by my friends to be rapidly growing on the left side of my neck. Iodine was freely applied during the following winter, but swelling continued to enlarge, until it reached the size of a large apple.

In the spring of 1861 I applied to Dr. Symmes, of Meaford (now dead), who blistered and punctured it but pronounced it devoid of pus. But upon a deep incision being made over half a pint of genuine pus was discharged. Immediately it healed, and began slowly to grow again, and in the spring of 1863 I had it operated on by Dr. Chas E. Barnhardt, of Owen Sound, after which, a terrible inflammation having set in, I went to the hospital at Toronto, and was about a month under the care of that eminent surgeon, Dr. Aikens. He treated the swelling by free incisions, and by setons, which were continued for six months, with no real benefit. In December of that year I was again under the care of Drs. Barnhardt and Allen Cameron for three months. It continued emptying and filling until March of 1864, when, it being closed over, I attended the Grammar School at Kincardine, but in June had it operated on by Drs. Moore and Martyn, then practising in that town. I had it opened that fall several times, and had it filled with tincture of iodine for the purpose of destroying the sac. I began teaching in school section No., Kincardine, in Feb., 1865. In about three weeks it violently attacked me again, and I was advised to go to Dr. P. R. Shover, of Stratford, who, with Dr. Hyde, opened the abscess and applied iodine freely into the inner walls of the cavity, which destroyed the rotundity of the sac, but produced no other benefit. In June, 1867, it inflamed again most violently, and I was under the care of Dr. S. Secord, of Kincardine, for six months. From that time until 1873 it was an open, unsightly sore. I removed to Virgil, township of Niagara, and taught during 1872, trying to labor, though under intense suffering. At Niagara I was so completely worn down that I consulted Dr. Wilson, who said he could only prescribe a nourishing and stimulating diet in order to meet the drain on the system. This kept me about, but offered no permanent benefit. In 1873 I moved to Port Credit Public School, but after eighteen months resigned my charge, afterwards assuming charge of Glen Williams school, County Halton. In May, 1874, suffering terribly, I again went to Toronto to the same Dr. Aikens that had treated me in the general hospital in 1863. That summer and fall I was greatly afflicted, and suffered fearfully during the winter of 1874-5. The next summer I went to Dr. Mahn, of Brampton, under great suffering. He treated me very skillfully and kindly, advising me precisely as did Dr. Wilson of Niagara. January, 1876, I became head master of the Bath school.

During a nine months' stay at Warkworth Dr. McRae and Dr Goldsmith, of that village, both operated on me, and also did Dr. Mitchell, while I was attending college at London. After my ordination on the 15th of June, 1878, I volunteered to take the Bishop's poorest mission, and through painful trial laboured on under the providence of God. I now have three fairly good churches. Starting from nothing, I have made for myself a pleasant and desirable home. When I came to Wiarton in July 1878, I was again violently attacked and confined to bed for over two weeks under the care of Dr. Wigle, who incised the abscess, and, by care I did my work until the following spring, when his services were again necessary, and again in December, 1879, I went to London and consulted Dr. Morehouse, and afterwards Dr. Woodruff. Although I had to work very hard that winter, I was under constant suffering. The abscess assumed a cancerous appearance. I assisted the Bishop in March of 1879 at St. James' church, Westminster, at which time my neck was completely covered with a white cloth. I am rejoiced to say that I no longer need to cover my neck to hide my affliction, and fear no recurrence of the same. Dr. Wigle, of Wiarton operated on me in May, 1880, and again in December of that year. I then went to London, and on my return I was again attacked more violently than ever. I was almost on the verge of despair, having been treated by the best medical skill the country contained as the many eminent names previously mentioned will show. When I had exhausted the skilful resources of the regular profession, I then resorted to nearly all the patent medicines that promised to cure scrofulous and blood diseases, but without any benefit whatever. When in an almost helpless condition I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took it for about four months, and in that length of time used several bottles internally, and having faith in its common-sense-like rational promises, and believing that if it was a good alterative blood-purifying medicine that would act upon the glandular system when taken internally, why, I reasoned, would it not, by the power of absorption, excite the glandular system and the secretions to a healthy action by direct application outwardly, through the medium of the skin, and thus exert a double curative influence. I applied it freely externally with the most astonishing and gratifying results. Believing I had made a singular and valuable discovery, I persevered in my efforts, and they to my great joy were crowned with success, and for the first time for years I was able to dispense with surgical aid, which I firmly believe I shall never require again for the same disease. More than two years have elapsed since I have had any attack of the disease, and I feel as well and safe now as if it had never affected me, which after more than twenty-three years of terrible suffering seems almost like a miracle to relate.

I have tried Burdock Blood Bitters for one of my children, who was afflicted with an obstinate humour of the blood, and whose face was covered with sores, now perfectly smooth and clean; also my servant, treated for swelled neck, and many other cases in our parish to whom we have given and recommended the remedy. Such is our faith in its virtues that I seldom go abroad without taking a small bottle for any suffering friend. Knowing that it cured me, and believing that it saved my life, I most earnestly and heartily recommend it to suffering humanity, and would urge all who may be similarly afflicted to give it a trial.

Believing it to be a true specific for all constitutional Scrofulous Blood Diseases, and unsurpassed as a rare healing remedy of great cleansing and curative power. I know of some who have died of my disease, and one in the very neighborhood where I was attacked, who perhaps might, like me, have rejoiced in restoration to health had they been possessed of this invaluable remedy. In conclusion I beg to refer to the following well-known parties, who have known me personally in the various places where I have taught school and labored in my mission work.

Hoping that their names may still further substantiate my veracity, and render this statement an encouraging message to many a poor suffering despairing mortal,

I am, faithfully yours.

THE MYSTERY OF GLAMIS CASTLE.

A Hidden Monster who was Heir to a Scotch Earldom.

A London letter says: The Strathmore family is one of the oldest and most historical of Scotland. They have been earls since 1423, and inhabit no less historical a castle than that of Glamis, associated with the Macbeths. In 1455 Lady Strathmore, falsely accused of conspiracy by witchcraft against the life of King James IV. of Scotland, was burnt in the Grassmarket, Edinburgh. Her son, driven desperate by persecution, flung himself over a rock and perished immediately. The title remained some years dormant, but was revived by James I. of England, IV. of Scotland. It is said the lady of Strathmore cursed her family for having abandoned her in her distress. Be this as it may, here is what has recently transpired in this ancient house. For four generations there has been a mystery at Glamis castle which no one has ever been able to fathom. Some said it was a ghost, others a mysteriously hidden treasure, but rumors of a more or less uncanny nature floated round the country and have done so for about ninety-three years. Four earls of Strathmore have seated themselves in ancestral state at Westminster, and yet all the while the real earl, the eldest of the family, was alive, hidden in the vast old feudal palace of Glamis. He died only last year, aged 92 years, and he was a monster. He stood eight feet in height. His head and the upper part of his body resembled that of a toad. His skin was marked with black and white splotches and his hands were webbed. He could not speak or hear, but his eyes were bright but wild. He never showed signs of reason, and in order to avoid legal difficulties and painful revelations this horror was hidden in a building erected on purpose. His jailers were paid handsome annuities to keep silent. As each earl succeeded to the estate he was taken to see this terrific creature, and it is said that one of these gentlemen almost lost his reason in beholding the loathsome and gigantic horror. Last year the poor wretch died and the secret has came out, owing to difficulties concerning the disposal of his remains. The most extraordinary part of it all is that the whereabouts of the monster earl was kept so wonderfully quiet, and also that he lived to such an advanced age.

"It Busted de Ball."

A ball at which a number of colored belles and beaux were chasing away the glowing hours with flying feet, came to a sudden and abrupt termination recently About 11 o'clock, when the merriment was at its height, a rap came at the door, which suddenly opened, and the gigantic figure of a woman, without either head or arms, stalked in among the happy throng. The music stopped, and the whole company started at the astounding apparition in speechless horror. Then a wild yell rent the air, and headlong out of the doors and windows plunged the terror-stricken, shrieking negroes—rolling, tumbling, clawing and scrambling over each other in their mad flight. The room was cleared as speedily as if the floor had unexpectedly opened up and dropped the whole party into the cellar. A gentleman, whose cook was one of the dancers, relates that he was just on the point of retiring when the girl fell in at the door and, sprawling on the floor, fainted dead away. It took him and his good wife three-quarters of an hour to bring her to life again, and in the morning she declared vehemently that she will never go to another dance as long as she lives. "She's dun had her warnin'." It is quite probable that a white neighbor, who was annoyed by the racket made by the darkies in their noisy festivities, could tell all about "dat ghostess' if he wanted to.—Paducah (Ky.) News.

Highly Historic.

A diplomatist is having an after dinner talk with the Grand Vizier of the Oriental sovereign to whose court he is accredited. "The only fault I have to find with your system of government," he says, laughingly, "is its murderous tendency. Why, not a single one of your Sultans has died in his bed during the last two hundred years!" "You mistake sir," says the Grand Vizier, with patriotic warmth. "Four of them have died in their beds during that period. Though I must admit that in each case the royal sleeper was found with the mattress on top of him!"—French Fun.

The will of Peter Cooper has been filed for probate in New York. The estate amounts to about two millions. The will bequeaths $100,000 to the Cooper Union. The greater part of the estate is divided equally between Edward Cooper and Mrs. A. S. Hewitt, children of the deceased.

Snakes as Life Destroyers.

The loss of life in India due to the ravages of venomous snakes is almost incredible. Yet consumption, which is as wily and fatal as the deadliest Indian reptile, is winding its coils around thousands of people while the victims are unconscious of its presence. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" must be used to cleanse the blood of the scrofulous impurities, for tubercular consumption is only a form of scrofulous disease. "Golden Medical Discovery" is a sovereign remedy for all forms of scrofulous disease, or kings-evil, such as tumors, white swellings, fever sores, scrofulous sore-eyes, as well as for other blood and skin diseases. By druggists.

From Mr. N. H. Pawling, one of the largest Fruit Growers in the County of Lincoln: Louth, April, 29, 1881. J. N. Sutherland, Esq., St. Catharines, Ont. Dear Sir,—I am much pleased to be able to inform you of the marked improvement in the condition of my wife since she has used the "Rheumatine." For upwards of four years she has been unable to leave her chair without assistance; the greater part of the time her hands, feet and limbs have been much distorted and almost powerless, while her sufferings from pain have been constant, frequently excruciating. Four bottles of your preparation have driven away the pain, restored sleep, and by reducing the swelling about her joints, have so much improved the action of her joints that she can now feed herself at the table, and be carried from room to room without suffering pain. The benefit to her has been wonderful; and should it cease now, I should still feel that a great obligation rests upon us for your kindness in bringing this relief within our reach. I hope, however, to find even greater results from the use of the remedy. Yours truly,

We know of nothing so well calculated to put the reading public out of humor as to begin a very interesting account of some scientific discovery, replete which interest, and just as the reader's mind is thoroughly imbued with the subject, and a gigantic effort being made to grasp it in all its bearings, away goes the author in praise of some patent medicine or new-fangled hair renewer; for instance, CARBOLINE, a deodorized extract of petroleum, as now improved and perfected, which, by the way, is an article of genuine merit, and has really done wonders in the hair producing way, as hundreds of certificates from well-known citizens ample testify. It is cleanly, and so penetrating that the disease is reached, and a radical change for the better takes place almost immediately. It contains nothing injurious; is, in fact, a natural hair restorer, made from petroleum, thoroughly deodorized and delightfully perfumed. It is sold by all dealers in drugs and medicines, at one dollar per bottle.

Take Your Choice.

You can be weak, nervous, debilitated and despondent, disqualified for work of head or hand, or you can enjoy a fair degree of health and peace of mind. Burdock Blood Bitters will alleviate your misery and do you a world of good if you will use them severe in their use for a few weeks.

I Am Now Using it Freely in My Practice.

'FACTS TELL THE STORY

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 21, 1882.

Mr. H. R. Stevens:

Heretofore I have been strongly opposed to all proprietary medicines, but, as there are exceptions to most rules, I feel that my prejudice against patent medicines has had a severe shock in the case of your VEGETINE and has been compelled to give way before the superior evidence of facts. About two years ago I was induced to give a fair trial of your Vegetine as a detergent in some Strumous (Scrofulous) cases of hereditary transmission, attended with swelling of the lymphatic glands and joints, carious ulcerations of bones, and constitutional syphilitic taint, &c., and in justice, I feel I should be derelict to duty did I not testify to the great value of your Vegetine. Without exception I have found it an admirable adjunct in the removal of the above constitutional disturbances. I am now using it freely in my practice. I am aware that I am rendering myself amenable to the charge of unprofessional conduct in thus disregarding the rules of medical ethics, in fostering so-called Quack Medicine. This is simply Bible Facts tell the story, and I again assert that Vegetine is a valuable adjunct to our Materia Medica. If this testimony to its value will save one more bottle, I shall feel that I have befriended some poor sufferer a Samaritan benefit.

Yours very truly,
JARVIS R. WILCON M.D.

I tell you of these extreme conditions of life to make you understand my story. I once went with some English officers duck-shooting up into these barren lands. Becoming separated from my companions, I lost my way, and asked the hospitance of one of the poorest of these people 'rice planters.' He left his work hastily, and with the smiling, friendly courtesy of which, by the way, one is almost sure in the poorest Chinaman at home. He remained with me from noon till dusk searching among the winding creeks and mud marshes for my companions. When we had found them I handed him a dollar, a sum larger than he would own safely in two or three years. He refused it, nor could all my persuasions induce him to take it.

Verbal Etiquette.

There is a distinction between certain phrases, according to circumstances, which, when misused, become vulgarisms. We give a few, taken from a London Journal:

The terms "ladies" and "gentlemen" become in themselves vulgarisms when misapplied, and the improper application of the wrong term at the wrong time makes all the difference in the world to ears polite; thus, calling a man a "gentleman" when he should be called a "man" or the speaking of a man as a man when he should be called a gentleman; or the alluding to a lady as a woman when she should be alluded to as a lady; or the speaking of a woman as a lady when she should be properly termed a woman.

Tact and a sense of the fitness of things decide these points, there being no fixed rule to go upon to determine when a man is a man or when he is a gentleman, and though he is far oftener termed the one than the other, he does not thereby lose his attributes of a gentleman. In common parlance, a man is always a man to a man, and never gentleman; to a woman he is occasionally a man and occasionally a gentleman; but a man would far oftener term a woman a woman than he would term her a lady. When a man makes use of an adjective in speaking of a lady he almost invariably calls woman, the term young lady gives place as far as possible to the term girl, although it greatly depends upon the amount of intimacy existing as to which term is employed. Now, to turn to the really tabooed words, "stylish" and "genteel" are relagated to the showroom, where they are very much used at home in each other's company, although considered decidedly vulgar when met with elsewhere. "Stylish" being bred in the show-room is the right word in the right place; but it is hard on unfortunate "genteel" that, conveying in itself so much, it should have met with such a fate. "Nice" bids fair to follow in the footsteps of discarded words; standing alone as an adjective, though passe, it still has its admirers, but when to nice is added either "awfully" or "too," then nice is altogether out of favor.

"Jolly" is well enough on the lips of a schoolboy, to whom it now of right belongs—a right which no one disputes; but slang proper is and never can be anything else than vulgar, and those who delight in its use for the embellishment of their speech to all intents and purposes intend to be vulgar.

The word "fellow," however much in use it may be between men, sounds very objectionable from the lips of women; and some women are given to the foolish conceit of speaking of every man they may happen to know as a "dear fellow," a "charming fellow," a "handsome fellow," a "clever fellow."

"Beau" and "belle" are terms now no longer in use; and for beau no equivalent has as yet been discovered, although the "beauty" has replaced the "belle."

Out of the nursery it is not customary for children to style their parents other than by the good old-fashioned reverential names of "father and mother." "Papa" and "mamma" are now nursery names only, but "pa" and "ma," those unpleasant abbreviations, are now happily quite out of date.

The courteous "thank you" has in a measure replaced the uncourteous "thanks," and it is no longer considered very fine to make this curt curtailment.

Gas for Nothing.

Scientific prophets have foretold that a day will come when the "residual produce" resulting from distilling coal will be so valuable as to reduce the price of gas to a mere nothing. That good time has not arrived, it must be confessed, but if we may believe the confident assertions of a gentleman at Chester, there is already in existence an appliance which goes a long way towards fulfilling these predictions. He claims to know a peculiar description of oven for making coke which, without the help of a high chimney, enables those who use it to drive steam engines with out any expense for fuel. Every ton of coal consumed in the oven yields coke worth 7s., and tar and ammonia worth 4s., in addition to 14,000 feet of gas. If, therefore, say the London Globe, the first two products are sold, the price—11s—more than pay for the slack coal from which they were driven, as well as for labor, wear and tear, and interest on the capital sunk in plant. The manufacturer consequently gets 14,000 feet of gas for nothing from every ton of coal subjected to the process, and this he can use instead of fuel to generate steam. It is certainly a bold claim to put forward, but it may perhaps, be justified by the present prices of coke, ammonia, and tar. If, however, these ovens come into general use, the market value of such products will assuredly fall heavily in proportion to the immense enhancement of supply, and in that case the price fetched would not cover the cost of materials and labor.

Newspapers as Investments.

Some people imagine that there is a fortune in the publication of an ordinary weekly newspaper under anything like favorable circumstances, while others are at a loss to know how funds and labor expended in such an enterprise can yield fair returns, unless in case of leading daily journals of large cities. Both opinions are materially wrong, although the latter comes near being correct. There are perhaps no enterprises where commercial success is so rare as in connection with the country newspapers, and a large proportion of those all over this continent are looked upon as a class of literary paupers or local parasites, which must be allowed sufficient patronage to exist upon. Then there is another class who depend upon the bonuses of ambitious towns or opulent politicians, and when these cease drag along in a miserable dead and alive manner. At a rule the journals on this continent bound up by political creed have not been commercially successful, even in many prominent instances, and those which now pay their publishers best, have invariable made politics a secondary consideration. In connection with newspaper publication one or two Bennetts may spring up in each generation, but the rank and file of the press are not usually in over easy circumstances, and there are fewer wealthy retired newspaper publishers than of any other profession known in America.—Winnipeg Commercial.

MANITOBA MATTERS.

What is going on in the Prairie Province.

Wheat is worth from 65 to 73 cents at Morris; oats, 40 to 45 cents.

The rush of business at the C. P. R. freight station has rendered it necessary to put on a night staff.

A magnificent lot of otter and bear skins were brought in to Selkirk from Lake Winnipeg this month by a trader.

Post offices have been opened at Chater, Moline and Sheppardville in this Province. The office at Grand Valley has been closed.

The plans for the new Selkirk registry office have been approved by the members of public works and tenders are asked for.

Business at Selkirk is improving. Merchants and traders generally are in good spirits and looking forward to a large summer's trade.

The lowest reading of the thermometer at Fort MacLeod for the week ending March 5th was 12 degress above zero; the highest it reached was 75.

Business at Portage la Prairie is improving and the money market is easier. Wheat is worth 70 to 75 cents; oats 38 to 40 cents; barley, 35 to 37 cents.

The North-west Land Company has notified its shareholders that unless the call due on the 1st inst. be paid the stock of defaulters will be forfeited.

A petition is being circulated at Fort McLeod, praying the Postmaster General to continue the mail route between Benton and that place, even after the C. P. R. has passed Calgary.

Selkirk has been made the county town for the municipality of St. Andrews, and the town Council are building a registry office and other public buildings. The county court will in future be held there.

A survey of the Little Saskatchewan at Rapid City shows that between the eastern boundary of the McLaren estate and Balkwill's mill, a distance of two miles, the river has a fall of 16 feet nine inches, affording an immense water power.

The merchants and other patrons of the C. P. R. are anything but well pleased with the recent advance in rates. The carload rate from Winnipeg to Selkirk is 10 cents per 100 pounds, or $20 per car, while you can receive a single hundred for 12 cents.

A special fast freight train from Montreal to Winnipeg is to be run weekly by the Grand Trunk Railway. This is in addition to all special mixed passenger trains. "The Merchants Express Fast Freight Train," as it is to be called, will leave Montreal every Monday morning.

The Emerson International of a recent date says: "We were to day shown one of the finest samples of Red Fyfe wheat that it has ever been our privilege to see. It weighs over 66 pounds to the bushel. Every one who has seen it says that it is the best Manitoban wheat yet."

The Rock Lake Herald of a recent date says: Last Tuesday night, at precisely ten o'clock, the western sky was brilliantly illuminated by the falling of a large meteorical stone near the boundary line between ranges thirteen and fourteen. It fell from the zenith of the heavens toward the west and was observed falling three minutes before passing below the horizon.

The Emerson International stock advertised for sale by the sheriff has been held over for a week. About half an hour before the auctioneer was to start the sale, a telegram was received from the sheriff in Winnipeg, postponing it for one week on the ground that it had not been properly advertised. It is reported that quite a number of intending purchasers would have bid.

The Face of the Globe.

It is estimated that the proportion of the surface of the globe covered by water is to the land surface as 278 to 100, and that the average height of land or continents over the world above sea level is somewhat less than 1,000 feet. The great mountain chains by which the continents are more or less traversed form narrow ridges, which rise in no case more than 29,000 feet, or say about 5 1-4 miles above sea level, and add comparatively little to the mass of ground above the sea level. On the other hand the contour lines of the oceanic basins tell a very different tale of the great submarine depressions. The soundings made on the recent voyage of the Challenger in the North Pacific Ocean have shown that its mean depth is not less than 15,000 feet, and that of the South Pacific about 12,000 feet, while the mean depth of the North Atlantic is found to be 14,000 feet, and of the South Atlantic 13,000 feet. It is only in high northern latitudes, in the North Atlantic and North Pacific, that the soundings give evidence of shallower seas—of a mean depth of about 8,000 feet. Thus it is extraordinary how small the mass of land projecting above the sea level is, compared to the mass of waters filling the depressions beyond that level.

Taking the average depth of the seas and ocean at 10,000 feet, and the height of the land at 1,000 feet, the mass of the land above water as compared to the mass of waters filling the ocean troughs is nearly in the proportion of 1 to 30. It is curious that the deepest sounding recorded by the "Challenger" in the N. W. Pacific registered a depth of about five miles and a-quarter—a depth which closely corresponds with the elevation above sea-level of the loftiest point of land, namely, the summit of Mount Everest, in the Himalayahs, which is 29,002 feet, or very nearly five miles and a-quarter. We must remember, however, that the one measurement is that of a mere peak, while the other probably gives the depth of an extended trough. We may thus realize how irregular are the contour lines of the globe, and how deep the depressions and abysses concealed from our view by seas and oceans. Could all these waters be drained off from the surface, our earth would present the aspect of a solid sphere everywhere wrinkled and deeply pitted. Nevertheless, its actual dimensions are so great that mountains five miles high and ocean troughs five miles deep bear no greater relation to the bulk of the globe than the irregularities on the skin of an orange.

How the Japs Raise Their Rice.

Rice holds the same relation to the people of Japan that wheat does to the Western nations. It is an every-day food, an important article of export to foreign markets, and the source of the common beverage known as sake, an alcoholic liquor prepared by fermentation. A bountiful yield of rice brings general prosperity, while the failure of the crop results in poverty and misery.

The seed is soaked in water from two to three weeks, and dried in the sun for a few days; while drying it is covered with mats in the afternoon, in order to retain the requisite heat for sprouting. When sprouts begin to appear, the rice is ready for planting in beds. These beds are carefully prepared and liberally manured. Repeated ploughings are given before the beds are irrigated, and repeated harrowings make them fine and mellow. The seed is sown broadcast, as evenly as possible, at the rate of forty bushels per acre. The sides of the beds are embanked with sods, which serve as a footway. About ten days after sowing, young plants will appear, when the water is drained off; after a day or so it is allowed to cover the beds for an inch or so. Frequent draining and irrigating in this manner are practised until the plants are ready for transplanting in the fields. In transplanting rice, farmers take advantage of the wet season, which is usually in the month of June. The fields receive thorough preparation for the reception of the young, tender plants. First, a liberal quantity of barnyard manure is applied, either the previous fall or early in spring, and the fields are repeatedly plowed. About ten days before transplanting, the fields are irrigated, and all lumps of earth pulverized. In Southern Japan two crops of rice are harvested, or, after harvesting the rice, winter wheat is sown; but in Northern Japan, a somewhat colder climate prevents this practice, and the rice fields are used for no other purpose, and produce only one crop.—American Agriculturist for May.

An Actress' Costume.

A well-known actress is described by the Boston Herald as wearing in the street a dress that made everybody in the throng turn and gaze at her. "The cloth of the suit was very light in color, and so much nearer bright yellow than sober drab that a sensitive person might have grown seasick in looking at it. Its make-up was not less peculiar than its hue. It fitted her splendid form with painful snugness, not only as to the waist, but all the way down to her feet. The surface of the bodice was corded lengthwise at half-inch intervals. The trimming consisted of wide bands of natural beaver—a fur as yellow as the rest of her surface. On her head was a hat made of the same cloth and fur; her gloves matched them, and, to complete the auriferous aspect, her auburn hair was bleached to precisely the prevailing shade." Speaking of actresses and dress, the New Haven Register says they have set a fashion of wearing wigs in private life, and other women are following their example. "I meet an acquaintance one day," says the writer, "and she is a light blonde, the next and she is a dark brunette, and the third she is as redheaded as a cockatoo. Her wigs are so finely made and so neatly adjusted that a casual observer would not detect the artificiality. Indeed, it is only by looking critically behind her that the question can be decided, for over the forehead and in the nape of the neck the false locks are so adjusted that they seem to have grown there."

A Financial Dictionary.

The New York Wall Streee News is responsible for the following, which it heads the "New Penal Code:" Although the new code does not strictly define the different degrees of theft and embezzlement, the administration of the laws and public censure would seem to classify these crimes according to the amounts stolen, and somewhat as follows:

Taking upwards of $5,000,000 is called reorganization.

$2,500,000	Great financiering
1,000,000	Financiering
900,000	Softening of the brain
800,000	Mismanagement
700,000	Misfortune
600,000	Irregularity
500,000	Breach of trust

Just Like Brother's Pig.

We heard the following a few days since from a "young bloomer," who had been seated between her oldest sister and her sweetheart during a drive in the country. On her return she accosted her mother thus: "Ma, Ma! I won't ride with sister——and Mr.——any more, for he kept a hugging, and a kissing her all the time. Now just see how she has 'mashed' my new hat." "My child, how can you talk so?" said the fond mother. "It can't be possible that your sister will allow Mr.——to take such liberties." "Yes, but it is possible," was the reply of the mischievous bloomer, "and, Ma, Ma! I tell you sister likes it, too, for she leans up to him just like brother's pig does to him, when he scratches it." Just about this time "we" were called off.—Irwinton (Ga.) Appeal.

More than $100,000 in an Old Coat.

Antonio Luggi, an Italian sailor, who has been staying at the "Seaman's Rest," made the astounding discovery that instead of being almost penniless as he supposed himself to be, he was the actual possessor of ready money to the value of nearly $125,000. While overhauling a bundle of clothes, before starting with two other sailors for Girard Point, to go aboard the bark E. A. Sanchez, which sailed yesterday afternoon for Havana with machinery, Luggi detected in the back lining of an old coat what seemed to be a quantity of paper padding, and a convenient rent in the garment enabled him to bring to view what was indeed paper, but paper in the shape of notes of the Bank of France the face value of which added up the startling total of 619,000 francs, or $123,800. It is needless to say that he did not go to sea.—Philadelphia Record.

A Peculiar Case of Blindness.

The case of Christopher Lynch, who is at present confined in the St. Mary's Hospital, is the most peculiar ever brought to that institution for treatment. Lynch was working last month in a field at his home in Butte county, when, without apparent cause, he became in an instant totally blind. As he never experienced any former trouble with his eyes, the physicians were at a loss to account for this peculiar affliction, so Lynch was sent to Dr. McCarthy at the Hospital in this city for treatment on Feb. 26, where he has since remained. The Doctor made a careful diagnosis of the case, and found that the blindness was caused by a sudden hemorrhage at the junction of the optic nerves where they pass from the brain to the pupil of the eye. There is only one other case of a similar nature recorded.—From the San Francisco Chronicle.

An Important Ceremony.

The most important religious ceremony after the coronation of the Czar will be the inauguration of the church consecrated to the Saviour. The foundation of this church was due to a vow of Alexander I. during the French occupation of Moscow. Begun in 1817 on Monks Hill, the only eminence in the neighborhood which breaks the dead evel, the works, after having cost an immense sum, were brought to a standstill after eight years, by reason of the discovery that the foundations were gradually sinking into the sand. A new site was then selected not far from the Kremlin. The work was begun in 1839, and is just on the eve of completion. It is in the purest Bizantine style. The material is as far as possible Russian, worked by Russians, the only foreign matter being certain marbles.

Liability of Bank Directors.

The Circuit Court of Macoupin County, in this State, has lately decided that bank Directors are personally liable to depositors for money deposited after the bank had become insolvent, and that their individual property can be levied on to make good the loss suffered through their failure to detect or make known mismanagement. We do not yet know whether this decision will be appealed to the Supreme Court; at all events it ought to be, for the principle involved is a very important one, and, in fact, essential to a sound banking system.—Chicago Herald.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of DR. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife ; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Eugenia.

The weather during the past week has been very blustering yet warm.

The long tedious winter has at last, like everything else, come to an end.

Ploughing has commenced and will likely be pushed forward vigorously owing to the great scarcity of feed.

It was thought at one time that very few would attempt to make sugar this spring owing to the depth of snow in the bush, yet it melted so gradually and yet quickly that now you can see camp fires all around.

We notice that the council of Artemesia intend, at its next sitting, to pass a by-law to prevent hogs and sheep from running at large. Why don't they include cattle as well? What right has neighbor to be compelled to build a fence five or six feet high in order to secure his crop against my stock, or the stock of perhaps a non tax-payer in an adjoining municipality. We think if the council had said hogs and cattle, but we will see how it works.

The above should have appeared last week but was crowded out.

Meaford Road.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Seeding has commenced.

Very little sugar making this year.

Some have gone to Manitoba from this locality, and more will likely follow.

Mr. Wm. Summers has moved to his farm, having succeeded in settling the difficulty in refrence to the title.

Fall wheat looks bad, and the general opinion is that the most of it will be plowed up and re-sown with spring grain.

The Meaford Road cheese factory has died a natural death, rival claims for site, and other causes assisted in killing it.

Spring is at hand and we are having very fine weather and it is indeed a welcome guest, robins and other spring birds have put in an appearance.

The milk hauling for this season, for Flesherton Cheese Factory commences the 7th of May, Ephriam, Brodie has secured the contract for this section.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Township Council of the Township of Euphrasia was held pursuant to adjournment on the 6th day of April 1883.

Members present, the Reeve, Deputy-reeve and Mr. James C. Paterson.

Minutes of last session of Council read and confirmed.

Thomas Jordan's time for returning his roll was extended until the June council meeting.

A petition signed by Richard Carefoot and twelve others praying for the opening of 6 & 7 side road laid over until next meeting of council.

The Clerk was ordered not to place any arrears of taxes against the E. ½ of lot 6, con. 1, as it was made to appear, that no arrears is due thereon.

The sum of $3 was errased from the taxes charged against the W. ½ of lot 6 concession 9, said amount being charged in error.

The reeve was appointed to negotiate with Mr. McKenny, concerning land for deviation road at lot 11 con. 1.

The Treasurer was ordered to remit to A. R. Fawcett of the Flesherton Advance $6.46 being the amount which this Township is entitled to pay for advertising notice of deviation road, in lieu of part of the town line between Euphrasia and Artemesia.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit to J. G. Sing, Esq., P. L. S the sum of $27 for surveying up to date as as per account rendered.

The Treasurer was authorized to receive from James Lyons, the sum of $9.40 charged against N. ½ of lot No. 11, con. 12, and the clerk ordered to request the County Treas. to strike this off his books.

The Reeves orders were issued on the Treas. to pay as follows, viz : Joseph Kaake, $6.60 for plant furnished for road purposes : Robert Dunlop, Clerk, $40. part salary for the current year ; Joseph Manary $55. salary as collector in 7 westerly concessions for 1882 ; Abraham Holden, $1.50, for repairing road scraper ; William McConnell, 50 cents for assisting the mail carrier on the 4th line.

The following named gentlemen were nominated as pathmasters, a bylaw will be passed for their appointment at next meeting of council, viz : J. T. Spikings, N. Mirrick, G. Emery, R. White, T. FOR THE FARMER.

Why do Hens Eat Their Eggs?

The hens that break and eat their eggs are usually those who are fed with kitchen waste. Feeding with meat or animal flesh seems to cause this bad habit, and fowls that are supplied with corn, wheat, scalded bran and meal in abundance do not seem to practice this vice. Once it is contracted there seems to be no cure. A frequent provocative of the habit is giving egg shells to the fowls; they eat these with avidity, and then learn to break eggs. Another cause is too close confinement in a house or yard and the leaving of eggs in the nest to freeze.

Are Short-Horn Cattle Hardy?

Yes, we answer, unhesitatingly, as much as any other breed of cattle in existence, when properly reared. They have only become delicate when foolishly stuffed from birth, with an excess of rich food, kept shut up from healthy out door exercise, and housed alike from summer heat and winter cold. There are thousands of thoroughbred and high grade Short-horns in the Western States that they have been reared without an hour's shelter of anykind, and had no other food since weaning, than grass, from spring to autumn, and the run of a cornfield in the winter; and these prove so superior when full grown, as to win the highest prices often over all other cattle at the various stock exhibitions throughout the country. Short-horn bulls when delicately bred, taken to the Western plains and turned out there among a head of half wild cattle to "shirk" for themselves, as a matter of course, could not long endure such a life; but had they been reared and kept in a proper manner, as some few of the wiser ranchmen have latterly done, these bulls would have served well and lived to a fair old age.

The grade progeny of Short-horn bulls out of Spanish or Texas cows, one of the ranchmen says, "unite the heavy qualities of the former with the power and activity of the latter." And to this they undoubtedly add the further merit of maturity two years earlier than their female ancestors. They consume no greater quantity of grass, and turn out a quality of beef worth from 50 to 75, and perhaps 100 per cent. more than the Spanish or Texas bullocks. The same story is told in Great Britain, where Short-horns and their grades have spread rapidly during a century past, from their original home in Durham, to the severe winter climate of the north of Scotland and the very mild one of the south of England; and throughout the country they are now successfully competing in thrift and a greater profit in breeding and feeding, with many of the various sorts of native cattle.

The celebrated African traveller, Livingstone, wrote, that in one large district of that excessively hot country, he found a native breed of cattle as large as and closely resembling the English Short-horns in all points. A similar native breed has existed from time immemorial, in the cold mountainous cantons of Switzerland.

Give the Short-horns plenty of healthy food and pure water, and they will do as well as better beasts; but we say, all cattle must be well sheltered from winter storms, by night, and have shade to go into during the exteme hot summer. On the prairie, the rough, hilly, mountainous land, smaller and more active breeds are more profitable, and these should be kept in such districts in preference to Short-horns, Herefords, and other large animals.—Rural Agriculturist.

Straw for Strawberries.

The advantages arising from covering strawberries are threefold. First, it protects them from injury by alternate freezing and thawing in winter. It is not yet too late to cover the beds, as they are most likely to be damaged late in winter and in early spring. Secondly, straw acts as a mulch, keeping the ground moist, and as the strawberry is about 70 per cent. water, this is a consideration not generally sufficiently taken into account. I consider straw worth eight dollars per ton for this purpose alone. Thirdly, by leaving the straw on, the fruit is kept clean. This is of great importance. We are liable to frequent showers in the picking season and as our customers require a daily supply of fruit, the picking cannot be delayed, so that the fruit will often be very filthy unless straw is used. I prefer straw as it is easily procured, quickly put on, and does no require removal in spring, as the plants will grow up through it if applied as it should be lightly. I use about one ton per acre. Apply just before a storm or during a light snow, when there is little wind. When it is once packed down is is not likely to be blown away. Coarse straw that has most bulk in comparison to weight, is best and should be free from foul seeds.

The Power of the Press.

The newspaper of to-day is the great free library of the people. There is no line of information which is withheld from its ample pages. People who do not have time to read books hardly need to realize any deprivation, if they will spend a few moments a day with their newspaper. An admirable practice for the newspaper reader is to keep a scrap book by him, and before he is aware of it he will be the possessor of a library of choice and valuable resource. Charles Reade, the popular book writer, is great scrap book maker, and his clippings from the papers fill many volumes; they are indexed for reference. The late President Garfield was a daily scrap book collector, and he made unlimited use of the incidents, anecdotes and thoughts he accumulated from the papers. Dr. Talmage, Henry Ward Beecher and other men who entertain the public are industrious newspaper readers, and draw from that source their most apt illustrations. The newspaper is at once educator, companion and friend. No individual or family can afford to be without it.

One Way of putting it.

SCENE.—A small barber's shop in Belfast. Glasgowegian, after having shaved: "What's to pay?" Barber: "Fourpence." Glasgowegian: "Fourpence! Why I could get a good shave in Glasgow for a penny!". Barber; "Shure aren't you better to pay this fourpence than go there and come back again?"

FACTS AND FIGURES.

England has $10,000,000,000 invested abroad.

Arkansas has doubled its population in 10 years. It is now the fourth cotton state.

The United States treasury now has the enormous sum of $135,000,000 in over-valued silver.

The Connecticut state oyster commission has jurisdiction over 300,000 acres of water territory.

Russia has increased its foundries in 10 years from 84 to 140 through the operations of a protective tariff.

Inclusive of European regiments, the total strength of the army in India is now about 150,000 men.

Maine has 49 cheese factories, with an average of 107 cows to each, 60 being the lowest and 500 the highest number.

The change of sheep farms into ostrich farms in Cape Colony has, in less than a year, reduced the price of feathers 50 per cent.

The ministers of religion in England and Wales number, in all, 36,000 of whom about 23,000 are clergy of the Church of England.

In 1881 England added more than £2,000,000 to her savings in the Post Office Bank, and the United Kingdom £2,450,000, while the depositors increased by 422,000.

The total imports into the United Kingdom in 1882 reached £395,656,000, which is rather above 4 per cent more than the total for 1881. The exports reach £23 939,000, or fully 3 per cent more.

The national loss by fire annually in the United Kingdom is £9,100,000; in France, £3,200,000; in Germany, £6,100,000; in Russia, £21,000,000; in Belgium, £500,000; in Scandinavia, £1,000,000; in the United States, £22,500,000; in Canada, £4,100,000.

The quantity of water used for extinguishing fires in the metropolis last year was 16,865,479 gallons in round numbers, nearly 17,000,000 gallons or about 75,292 tons. Of this quantity about 9,061 tons were taken from the rivers, canals, and docks, and the remainder from the street-pipes.

The sailing tonnage of the seven principal maritime nations is as follows:—Great Britain (18,035 vessels), 5,319,872 tons; United States (6,057 vessels), 2,054,685 tons; Norway (4,112 vessels), 1,381,203 tons; Germany (2,871 vessels), 933,387 tons; Italy (3,054 vessels), 924,957 tons; Russia (2,155 vessels), 477,072 tons; France (2,536 vessels), 406,370, tons.

The Soudan provinces form a very large proportion of the Egyptian territory. While Egypt proper includes but 210,000 square miles, or rather more than four times the area of Great Britain, the annexed provinces, comprising the Soudan, Nubia, and the equatorial districts generally, are said to contain 1,026,250 square miles, or more than half the area of Russia in Europe.

Second Sight.

According to a theory which in years gone by was much credited in Scotland, the gift of second sight is conveyed to some persons by means of dreams. It is asserted that occasionally dreams are used as a vehicle of intercourse between the visible and unseen world, whereby an intimation is made not only of what is actually taking place at a long distance off, but of coming events. Indeed, this belief is still a deep-rooted one; and, it must be acknowledged, many curious instances are on record illustrative of its truth: evidence which, as Sir Walter Scott affirms, neither Bacon, Boyle nor Johnson could resist. Mr. Henderson has collected together some striking cases, two of which we quote. A lady of Truro dreamed the night before a boating party that the boat was upset, and she herself drowned. She therefore determined not to join it, and sent an excuse. The party returned safely, however, and the lady, after telling a friend what had passed, and describing where she had dreamed the body would be found, ceased to think of the matter. A month or two later the lady had occasion to cross the Truro River at King Harry's Passage; the boat was upset, she was drowned, and they sought for the body in vain. Then the friend to whom she had told her dream came forward, and pointed to the spot marked out in the dream as the body's resting place, and there it was found. The second instance, which occured in 1848, and was narrated in the papers of the day, is as follows: Mr. Smith, gardener to Sir Clifford Constable, was supposed to have fallen into the Tees, his hat and stick having been found near the waterside, and the river was dragged for some time, but without success. A person named Awde, from Little Newsham, then dreamed that Smith was lying under the ledge of a certain rock about 300 yards below Whorlton Bridge, and that his right arm was broken. The dream so affected this man that he got up early and set out at once to search the river, and on the first trial he made with the boat-hook he drew up the body of the drowned man, and found the right arm actually broken. There are numerous cases of this kind, many of which it has been found difficult to explain; but the question is one which has already engaged the attention of the psychological student.

NORTH-WEST NOTES

Carefully Culled From Manitoba Papers.

Hot-house gardening at Portage la Prairie has begun.

Track laying on the P. W. & N. W., west of Gladstone has commenced.

Steps are being taken to have Moose Jaw incorporated as a city.

The business of the money order department at the post office at Portage la Prairie during March amounted to $9,508.18.

Business at Emerson has been very good, quite in keeping with the expectations of those engaged in it. Very little grain is being offered.

The contract for the new bridge over Cook's Creek at Selkirk has been awarded to a Winnipeg firm for $750, and the pile driving has been commenced.

The Massey Manufacturing company of Toronto is building one of the largest implement warehouses in Brandon, on the corner of Princess avenue and Nith street.

The railway bridge at Emerson has been advanced about as far as possible before the water rises. The piles are all driven and sawn off below the surface of the water, and the completion of the concrete work is going on.

Says the Marquette Review: "Several Ontario gentlemen, now in town, say that they could not believe any place could have made such material progress as Portage la Prairie has since they were here last spring."

The citizens of Brandon held a public meeting recently to consider the advisability of granting a bonus to the C. P. R. if that corporation would agree to build 20 miles of the Souris branch this year. At the meeting it was decided to offer a bonus of $50,000 if the C. P. R. would agree to put their workshops there.

At Brandon business has made vigorous strides on the road to improvement. Immigration flows in, and the station presents a very busy appearance. The yards are full of freight. The number of cars received is increasing every day, and the C. P. R. officials are preparing for a greater boom than they had last year.

The Emerson International of a recent date says: "Last evening we had the pleasure of witnessing one of these remarkable phenomena for which, at certain seasons this country is noted. We refer to the mirage. The Pembina Mountains, some 50 miles distant, could be distinctly seen, and their outlines clearly cut against the western horizon, the undulations and ravines being plainly visible. They appeared to be only a few miles distant, and old residents here says it was one of the best defined mirage they had seen for years."

The Founder of Plymouthism.

The London Outlook gives the following estimate of the character and work of the late Mr. J. W. Darby:—

"The death is announced of Mr. J. W. Darby (so well-known in connection with the movement known as Plymouthism) in the eighty-second year of his age. He has survived all the men of the early movement except Mr. B. W. Newton and Mr. Parnell (now Lord Congleton,) who were, however estranged from him for more than a generation. He began life as a clergyman of the Established Church in Ireland, but withdrew from all ecclesiastical relations to found little communions, which were to greatly influence the Christian Church of his day.

"Mr. Darby began his life as the most catholic of men. He ended by founding a system of the hardest and most exclusive ecclesiasticism. The disintegrator of churches he failed to point out anything that could take their place.

Little knots of hard, dogmatic Antinomian disputers represent his work of half a century, but they are everywhere in Ireland, England, Scotland, America, Australia, France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and India. A gentlemanly, soft-spoken man, capable of establishing easy relation with casual acquaintances, in controversy he was uncompromising, one-sided, and bitter. There has been nothing like him in his treatment of opponents since Robert Sanderman and William Huntingdon. It is a curious commentary on such men that they should begin life by an effort to draw Christians together in still closer relationship, and end by a system of social war that tramples under foot all the amenities of family relationship, all the courtesis of society, and all the sweetest maxims of the Caristian religion.

A Remonstrance.

Retiring Old Gent (who had evaded the income tax for a year, and been "brought to book" at last): "Well, I can just manage it this time; but, look, here, you must inform Her Majesty that in future, 'po' my word, she really mustn't count upon me as a source of income!"—Punch.

Says St. Jacobs Oil "takes the cake,"
He gave it one test,
And says its the best
Cure in the world for backache.

Little Selim Myers swallowed a dime belonging to his mother one day last week. He had ten cents of his own, and when he realized that the swallowed coin belonged to his mother, he jubilantly exclaimed: 'I am glad it wasn't mine!"

Charles Somerville, a machinist, employed in the lock works at Stamford, Conn., is so expert in his business that he can cut an ordinary sewing-machine needle in two lengthwise, drill a hole through each half, and then fasten them together so accurately that the place where it was separated cannot be seen.

Where the Word "Dude" Came From.

The just now popular word "dude," meaning an empty-headed, languid mannered young swell who bangs his hair, proves to be no foreign importation, but, like many other expressive terms, to be a good New England parentage. The word (pronounced in two syllables) has been used in the little town of Salem, N. H., for twenty years past and, it is claimed, was coined there. It is common there to speak of a dapper young man as a "dude of a fellow," of a small animal as "a little dude," of a sweetheart as "my dude" and of an æsthetic youth of the Wilde type as a dude. But how the word attained so sudden and widespread a notoriety puzzles Salem. Its revival at New York is credited to a disgusted Englishman, who remarked, after visiting a rich club, that the young men were all "dudes."—Springfield Republican.

Too Much Good Luck.

"Nothing exasperates me so much as to hold a lottery ticket, and find the next number has won a prize," remarked Peter Freer to Harry Andrews.

"I came closer than that to winning the big prize in the lottery."

"How was that possible?"

"Well, there was a raffle for a clock, and I threw the identical number that won the big prize in the lottery."

"Did you win the clock?"

"No. How much good luck do you suppose a man can have at once?"

From Mr. Percy Perdon, the oldest Mail Clerk running on the G. W. Railway between Suspension Bridge and Detroit: "About 18 months ago in conversation with you, I mentioned that my son Arthur was a great sufferer from rheumatism, being so bad that for months he had not been able to put on his boots or walk. At your suggestion I purchased from you four bottles of your Rheumatine. Three bottles, however, I am happy to say, effected a permanent cure, as my son has never suffered from rheumatism since, although the past winter has been a most trying one. I may add that the medicine had the effect of improving his health in every way. Make what use you like of this testimonial. I can thoroughly recommend your Rheumatine to all suffering from rheumatic complaints. I am, yours truly, PERCY PERDON, Agent Great Western Railway." J. N. SUTHERLAND, Esq., Niagara Falls, Ont.

Vegetine
CURED ME.

ROCHESTER, November 22, 1881

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I have suffered for the last three or four years with Liver Complaint and Kidney troubles. Previous to taking the VEGETINE I was under the doctor's care for a long time, but he did not help me. My friends all thought I would not recover. I began using the VEGETINE and realized good effect from it right away. I had taken but three bottles before I was much better. I continued taking a few bottles more, and can truly say I am enjoying the best of health. I have given it to my wife and daughter with great success. Since it has done me so much good I have recommended it to several, and they have all been greatly benefited by its use. Respectfully,

C. J. SMITH, 218 S. Franklin St.

Place of business, 72 West Avenue.

Mr. Smith is a well know dealer in stoves and tinware, for many years in business in Rochester.

Worth its Weight in Gold.

TORONTO, ONT., June 2, 1881

H. R. STEVENS, Esq., Boston, Mass.:

Sir—Having been persuaded by a friend of mine to try VEGETINE for Kidney Disease, with which I have been troubled for four years, I consented and have given it a fair trial and am happy to say I am relieved to such an extent that I can attend to my work with ease and comfort, which I was deprived of for over three years. The best medical men of Toronto have given my case up as hopeless. I have tried every kind of medicine I have ever heard of, but with no avail whatever. Any person who may be afflicted with the same terrible disease I would certainly advise to try VEGETINE, for I assure you [as many can testify] that it is undoubtedly the best medicine on record for the Kidney Disease. I am able to work at my trade as gilder and earn a living for my wife, two children and myself, through VEGETINE, which I consider is worth its weight in gold. Hoping that those who may give VEGETINE a trial may receive the same benefit that I have, I remain, Yours Respectfully,

CHAS. COOKE, 106 John St.

I gave Mr. Cooke the medicine, and know this statement to be true.

LATE NEWS NOTES

The Dublin Trials—The War Cloud—A Fenian Torpedo.

Mr. Edward Shiel has become whip of the Irish party, not Mr. O'Connor as previously announced.

Mr. Kettle, an ex-suspect, has seceded from the Parnellite party.

Louise Michel is held for trial at the next assizes on a charge of inciting to riot. She will conduct her own defence.

It having been discovered that an area in Central Asia is suitable for the production of cotton, the Orenburg Russians are preparing to make the experiment.

Twenty-one of the twenty-four members of the South Russian Workmen's Federation, recently sentenced in Odessa to long terms for Nihilism, have petitioned the Czar for a mitigation of their sentence.

In the trial of Daniel Curly, charged with participating in the murder of Lord F. Cavendish and Mr. Burke, the judge's charge was strongly against the reliability of the evidence to prove the alibi. The judge said there could not be the slightest doubt that the murders were perpetrated at the instigation of the secret societies with which the prisoner was indisputably connected.

The prisoner being asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced on him, replied that he had not expected any mercy from the Court; it was very unfortunate that the Irish bench was never without a Norbury or a Keogh. He admitted that he was a member of the "Invincibles," but declared he was not in Phœnix Park on the evening the murdor was committed. He loved his country, and would suffer for her. He declared that the witnesses for the Crown perjured themselves. He also said he was a Fenian. As the officers were taking the prisoner from the dock he shouted "God Save Ireland."

McNulty, arrested at Wakefield recently on suspicion of being a Fenian, has been let go.

The Home Office has issued a circular directing the attention of local authorities to the importance of vigilant observation to prevent persons getting possession of explosives and materials from which explosives are made. A reward of a hundred pounds is offered for information leading to the discovery of any person engaged in the illegal manufacture of explosives.

In the House of Commons a motion introduced by Mr. Pell (Conservative) in favor of immediate reform of local taxation, was only rejected by 217 to 229. An amendment was accepted by the Government postponing the consideration of reform measures until the whole question of local government was dealt with. The closeness of the division on Mr. Pell's motion was loudly cheered by the Tories.

The Nord Deutsche Zeitung, of Berlin, replying to the comments of the French press, says if the monarchy be restored in France, it is not very likely Germany would declare war forthwith. She would probably await action by France, which would soon be made, as, under certain contingencies, a restored monarchy could probably be induced to declare war on Germany without warning.

Forty-eight cities and towns in Illinois voted upon the liquor question; seventeen declared for prohibition or anti-license and thirty-one for license. Of the latter six were for high license.

It has been decided to formally open the East River Bridge in New York on May 24th.

The House of the Connecticut Legislature has passed a bill giving counsel for defendants in criminal cases the right to the closing argument to the jury.

There are at least five thousand Italian workmen out of employment in New York. Mulberry and Crosby streets are thronged with them, and additions are made to their numbers from every steamer which arrives from Italy.

The United States Treasury Department has made preparation for the enforcement of the law passed at the last session to prevent the importation of adulterated, spurious or exhausted teas.

In the Michigan Senate the joint resolution proposing a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution was recently agreed to in Committee of the Whole, but subsequently laid on the table.

At a recent municipal election in Flint, Mich., three ladies were elected members of the School Board, some 100 or more women voting. The old board has referred the matter to the Attorney-General for his decision, and much excitement is caused thereby. It will probably go to the Supreme Court.

The Arkansas Constitution contains a clause which provides that "No person who denies the being of a God shall hold any office in the civic department of this State, nor be competent to testify as a witness in any court;" and a movement is on foot to enforce it against Mayor Foster, of Texarkana, on the ground that he is an atheist and has no title to his office.

J. P. Holland, the inventor of the torpedo ram which has been lying in Pamrapo, N. J., for several days); Mr. Gilbert, the engineer, and the "crew" have been busy making final preparations for the departure of the Fenian "navy." A few personal friends of the inventor witnessed some interesting experiments. It is expected that this novel engine, which has been constructed for the destruction of British ships, will leave her present moorings for "parts unknown."

The Grand Jury in Washington have returned indictments against William P. Kellogg, for receiving money whilst a United States State Senator, and Thos. J. Brady, for receiving money whilst Second Assistant Postmaster-General, for services rendered in relation to contracts with the United States.

George Albert Mason, recently released from Albany Penitentiary, to which he was sentenced on a charge of counterfeiting, had filed a claim against the United States with the British Legation in Washington for $50,000 damages. Mason claims to be a Canadian and his conviction, at the instance of the United States secret service, malicious persecution. The chief of the secret service says Mason's claim is preposterous.

It was expected that Herr John Most, the Socialist, would meet the delegates of the Federation at Washington on Tuesday night, for the purpose of interchanging views on the labor question. Most waited at the hotel to be sent for, but a stormy debate occurred in the Federation, starting from the book-binders' Union, some expressing fears that questions of dynamite and violence would be brought up should such meeting take place. The discussion ended in disruption, caused by outspoken expressions of "Knownothingism," the Federation being about equally divided between native born and foreigners.

At the London Assizes, Mr. McDougal, the Crown counsel, said he had had before him certain depositions in the case against James F. and J. A. Mahon, but, owing to the state in which he found the case, he did not propose at present allowing it to go before the grand jury. He would, therefore, ask His Lordship to allow the defendants to go out on their own recognizances. The application was granted.

Mr. William Gillespie, who for a number of years has held the position of chief landing waiter at Hamilton, will receive the appointment of collector at the Port of Dundas on May 1st. The position of landing waiter will be filled by Mr. Herbert L. Dias.

The Prince of Wale's new railway carriage is a marvel of æsthetic decoration. It is fifty feet long, and contains a saloon, study, two bedrooms, two dressing rooms, and a bath room. The Prince's bedroom is hung with old gold silk, and the furniture is upholstered to match. Mirrors are let into the door panels, and the whole suite can be lighted either by candles or by electricity. The prince pays for its use. It was first used on his Royal Highness' recent journey to Berlin.

How a Monkey Blushes.

Mr. Darwin remarks the fact noticed by Mr. Sutton, that the face of the Macacus rhesus when much enraged, grows red. Mr. Darwin himself saw the face of this monkey redden when attacked by another monkey, and he also adds that the "seat-pads" also seemed to redden under the influence of anger, although he could not "positively assert that this was the case." My monkey Jenny, when in a rage, blushed most distinctly. A red hue shot over and obscured the normal yellow tint of the skin of the face, and I noticed that the "seat-pads" occasionally also grew redder. Another curious fact concerning this monkey's behavior when enraged consisted in the variations she exhibited when she was irritated by myself and by another person. If irritated by another person she behaved as already described; she shook the cage and chattered while her face flushed like that of a human being in anger. If, on the other hand, I had occasion to reprove her, she darted down to the bottom of the cage, lay down on her belly, and, as often as not, concealed her face in the straw. The analogy between that ineffective or suppressed rage in a human being, which is shown by the person throwing himself down on the ground—a feature seen familiarly in some children—and the behavior of Jenny, under my reproof, appears to me to be too exact to escape notice. Paddy, the Capuchin, or the contrary, when enraged or frightened, used to retire to a corner of the cage and stand on his head, uttering, meanwhile, the most plaintive cries in the well-known shrill but musical voice of the race. On one occasion, when a servant had allowed Paddy to imbibe nearly half a glassful of champagne, he showed his alcoholic dissipation by standing inanely on his head and vainly endeavoring to emit his familiar cry. Mr. Darwin mentions the case of a young female chimpanzee who, when enraged, "presented a curious example to a child in the same state. She screamed loudly with widely open mouth, the lips being retracted, so that the teeth were fully exposed. She threw her arms wildly about, sometimes clasping them over her head. She rolled on the ground, sometimes on her back, sometimes on her belly, and bit everything within reach."—The Gentleman's Magazine.

The Diamond Rattlesnake.

Of all the snake varieties of which we have yet any knowledge the diamond snake, as it is called, seems to be the most deadly. It grows to a length of 6 feet or 7 feet, and is somewhat thicker than a man's wrist. It is armed with the whitest and sharpest of fangs, nearly an inch in length, with cisterns of liquid poison at their base. A terror to man and beast, he turns aside from no one, although he will not go out of his way to attack any unless pressed by hunger. A description of his movements by a traveller who has encountered him states that he moves quietly along, his gleaming eyes seeming to emit a greenish light, and to shine with as much brilliancy as the jewels of a finished coquette. Nothing seems to escape his observation, and on the slightest movement near him he swings into his fighting attitude, raising his upper jaw and erecting his fangs, which in a state of repose lie closely packed in the soft muscles of his mouth. This snake is not so active as the famous copper-head of North America, nor so quick to strike, but one blow is almost always fatal. His fangs are so long that they penetrate deep into the muscles and veins of his victim, who has little time for more than a single good bye before closing his eyes for ever. In one instance the fangs were found to be seven-eighths of an inch in length, and though not thicker than a common sewing needle they were perforated with a hole through which the greenish yellow liquid could be forced in considerable quantities, and each of the sacs contained about half a teaspoonful of the most terrible and deadly poison.—London Times.

The Very Oldest.

There is a tree in Windsor Forest, England, "the King Oak," which is known to be a thousand years old. But the very oldest tree in the world, so far as can be ascertained, is the Bo Tree, of the sacred city of Amarapoora, Burmah. It was planted 228 B. C., and is, therefore, now 2,170 years old. It is referred to in historic domestic documents 182 A. D., and 283 A. D. According to tradition it is the tree under which Buddha reclined when he underwent his apotheosis. Its leaves are deemed sacred, and the tree is never cut with a knife, while the leaves which fall from it are religiously preserved for charms.

Regal Trappings.

The magnificent mantle which the Czarina will wear at the coming coronation is made of cloth of gold, broidered with armorial bearings embroidered in silk and gems. The crown placed on her head will be the one worn at the coronation of the Empress Catherine II. and Elizabeth. Its value is estimated at three millions of rubles, and it is composed of diamonds, rubies, and a large number of pearls. In her sceptre will blaze the great Orloff diamond, which is said to weigh eight carats more than the Koh-i-noor. The procession will consist of thirty-three carriages. That of the Czarina was made at Berlin by the orders of Frederick the Great, and presented by him to the Empress Elizabeth. It is a kind of double throne without springs, but hung on four bands of red velvet. A single window, framed in white satin, forms the front, and the imperial eagles and the crown set in brilliants adorn the panels. It will be drawn by eight white horses, comparisoned with red velvet, and flashing with gold and precious stones.

A Death-Blow.

"I cannot agree with my neighbor," said a citizen as he consulted a lawyer the other day.

"Build a fence fourteen feet high between you," promptly returned the lawyer.

"Yes, but it would shut out all my light."

"Can't you raise your roof so as to make his chimneys smoke?"

"I'm afraid my foundations wouldn't stand it."

"Keep your piano going."

"I do, but he has an organ."

"Set the police after him for his ash-heaps."

"I have too many of my own."

"Let's see—let's see!" mused the puzzled lawyer. "Say, suggest to some of his friends to get up a surprise party on him!"

"By George! I'll do it! That's just the checker! I'll have the thing fixed this very week! Here's your $5, and I'm much obliged besides. Revenge is mine at last!"

Paying $12,000 to Prove That He Warned the Man.

Henry Henmann, a wealthy furniture manufacturer in New York City, who was charged about a year ago by Elizabeth Gensier, who had just come from England, with having abandoned after marrying her, but was acquitted, has since been spending a good deal of money in trying to find the real husband. He has at last succeeded, and Mrs. Gensler, when confronted with John Gensler, foreman in the furniture factory of Hollander & Sons, Baltimore, acknowledged that he was her husband. Gensler acknowledged that he had once lived with the woman in London. When he met her he was 21 and she was 45, with several grown children. He does not acknowledge that he was married to her or that he has since married. It is stated that Mr. Henmann spent $12,000 in demonstrating his innocence, and at the close of the trial the judge told him that if he had been a poor man he would have gone to State Prison. —Washington Star.

Don't make a vow never to clean house again.

Don't set your husband's dinner on the bottom of a wash tub.

Don't make a fuss if you find the baby having a bread and molasses party on your white satin pillow. You can't help the sofa pillow, and the baby won't understand what you're going mad about.

Don't try to make ends meet, when the carpet you bought at the auction won't go within two feet of a wall. Buy a border to match it, or move into a smaller house, or get a mason to move the walls to fit it.

A Rumored Wedding.

A good deal is said about the probable marriage of Princess Clementine of Belgium and Prince Albert Victor of Wales. The talked of union, says the London Truth, would have its advantages and drawbacks. Among the former is the wealth accumulated by the first and second Leopold. Under the Belgian law the Princess Clementine must inherit a third of the very important dowry which the archduke Joseph gave her mother, and the same share of the paternal fortune, and of that of her Aunt Charlotte. Her great monetary expectations should relieve the House of Commons of the necessity of voting her "a suitable provision." Heretofore the different princes and princesses who arrived from Germany to enter the royal family were unprovided for unless by the British Parliament.

A Strange Story of Real Life.

William Leverich, the driver of Thirty-eight's engine, made the most singular discovery that he had been living in the same town with his sister for three years, but all the time unknown to him, and the accidental occurrence of his name in a newspaper was the means of his making the discovery. Leverich left home about thirteen years ago, and like so many other young men in obeying Horace Greeley's precept to go West, he drifted West and finally to California. He became careless in his correspondence, and for several years his folks did not know where he was. During this time his sister married a gentleman named J. S. Hunt, and three years ago they came to Los Angeles. As Mrs. Hunt did not know of her brother's whereabouts, and he did not know she was married or in California, they did not meet until recently, when Mrs. Hunt accidently saw her brother's name in the Herald.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, APRIL 26TH, 1883.

"ANOTHER HAND ON."

Last week's Advance comes out with half a column under the above heading. The editor says there are indications of a new hand in the editorial department of the STANDARD. We must inform him of his mistake, we never had one to Control that department of our paper, or even to assist. True, we have extra hands on, but they are in the mechanical department, and are no discredit to the craft, our fast increasing business has necessitated the employment of extra help in order to keep up the reputation of the STANDARD Office for despatch in filling orders. Then the Advance would have us believe that his letter over the signature of "Artemesia Farmer" was a bona fide one, this is entirely too thin, we don't believe there is a farmer in Artemesia that would believe it, and many of them have expressed themselves to that effect in our presence. But the latter part of his article is perhaps the most untruthful and ungrateful production he has advanced towards ourselves, he says, "from the day he issued the first number of the Advance, up to the present, our course has been one of unceasing hostility towards him, and that we never missed an opportunity to vent our spleen on him." Now the public who have been constant readers of the STANDARD since the Advance issued it's first number, are the judges, and we leave the matter with them, knowing they are more capable of judging, and more to be relied on than our cotem, and we again affirm our position in these matters has always been in the defensive, and besides this we have not in any case solicited work from any business man in Flesherton, other than general newspaper advertising, since the Advance first came there, though it belonged to our field and we did their printing previously. We have canvased for, and secured in Markdale Advertising for the Advance, and have on various occasions assisted him when an opportunity presented itself, and then he has the presumption to state that we have been his enemy from the start, of course these affairs would not have been mentioned by us, but when we are assailed, in the way mentioned, it becomes our duty to defend ourselves and our position.

CONDENSED FROM OUR EXCHANGES.

DURHAM.—Mr. Robert Allan, of Glenelg Tp., lost three children by the hand of death, in two days last week.

Great damage is done in this locality by the spring freshets.

The body of Mr. N. Campbell who was drowned a week ago Saturday, was found last Sunday afternoon about a quarter of a mile down the stream, it having been in the water eight days.

SHELBURNE.—The spring show of entire horses will be held to-morrow, (Friday.)

The Methodists have asked for tenders to build an addition to their Parsonage.

Rev. John A. McDonald, Pesbyterian Minister, of Parkdale, has accepted a call from Hornings Mills and Honeywood congregations, ORANGEVILLE.—This town wants manufacturing industries, and is determined to have additional ones.

Fall wheat prospects are good in this section.

The conference of the M. E. Church is in session this week.

Several brick stores will be erected on Broadway this season.

DUNDALK.—Smith & Demy are removing to Meaford and Mr. Humphries to Wiarton, these having been burnt out at the late fire.

Mr. John Marshall is gone to the North West.

Mr. Robert Rutherford, has commenced making brick at Proton station.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

SALE OF COWS.—Mr. Pickett's auction sale of cows last Saturday was a complete success. There was about twenty good cows sold at prices ranging from $30 to $40. In fact, where Mr. Vandusen is auctioneer you can depend on having a successful sale. His abilities for getting dollar bids near the last is something extraordinary.

LEFT FOR WARMER CLIMATE.—Mr. Hooper and daughter left this Wednesday morning for Achison city, Kansas, U. S.

ENTERTAINMENT.—A very successful entertainment was held in the town hall last Thursday, under the auspices of Judge McPherson, of Owen Sound, and Messrs. Armstrong and Vandusen, of this village. The chair was occupied during the day by his Honor Judge McPherson. Several legal gentlemen from Orangeville, Shelburne, Dundalk, and Owen Sound ably assisted the performers. These entertainments, which are held quarterly, are very interesting and instructive to parties having any debts to collect.

RETURNED.—Mr. W. H. Elder has returned home to Flesherton after an extensive tour through the Southern States and Lower California. He is greatly improved in health.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Having read T. Kell's reply to Observer's letter published in the STANDARD of the 19th inst., I beg space in your interesting paper to reply. The first statement that he makes about me, viz.: that I invested and lost money in club 13, of Chicago, is a falsehood, and as I never invested one cent in said club, and therefore could not lose anything; but if I had, what, is it Mr. K's or any other person's business? but it shows his mean disposition if he had the chance, by referring to things of that class that are entirely foreign to the subjects under discussion. Then he says his first letter was purely and simply advocating the periodical importation of seed grain by our Provincial Government. His letter is now before me, and has been before the public some time and read, count, or measure it as we will at least two thirds of it is referring to other matters. Again, he says the matter of seed grain was well discussed by leading farmers, in January last, therefore he is not alone in the deplorable ignorance in which he says I try to place him. Now Sir, I positively deny that I accused him or anyone else in my letter, of ignorance in connection with the subject of seed grain, and no one but an imbecile or a person devoid of veracity would make such a statement after reading my letter. Then he says he will leave an intelligent public to judge of the merits of the two letters. Well, I am glad he cannot do otherwise, but he appears to try to mislead as far as he can. He wants me to write over my own name. Well, Sir, I have written nothing of which I am ashamed, but, as I know T. K. well I expected he could not refute or answer the arguments advanced in support of the positions I took, and if he knew my name he would reply in a personal abusive style, and my suspicions have been confirmed, as he did not reply until he thought he had found the writer. And again, your readers are generally intelligent enough to judge fairly of the merits of the subjects discussed, without knowing the name of the writer. I neither made any false or groundless statements nor used ungentlemanly language, but backed up my arguments with facts which he does not attempt to refute, and if fair logical deductions drawn from the arguments were applied a little severely, they were not as much so as they might have been. He should learn wisdom thereby and not expose himself before the public again. But there is an old adage and a true one I think to, that experience will teach a fool. In regard to T. K.'s letter one must come to the conclusion he was not one, but that he belonged to a more hopeless class—"A man wise in his own conceit;" Prov. 26, xii. One place he says it took me a long time to brood over his letter No. 1, and a piece farther on he advises me to read before I write, what consistency? Whether he or I require such advice I leave the intelligent public to judge.

Angain, the only fact he adduces to prove that the Government is not easy of approach is respecting deputations who waited on the Government advocating the supposed claims of the T. G. & B. R. Co., which claims the Government refused to admit, as they had paid, and did pay, all that they agreed to pay any R. Co., under the same circumstances. If the government had set a precedent of giving the above Co. what is wanted and asked, there were several other R. Cos. that had equally as good claims, some of which did apply and others intended to apply. Experience has shown that the Government was wise and justifiable enough in the course they pursued in that respect, Hence his argument based on that instance is groundless. Then he refers to the creameries, and here he makes another mis-statement. He accuses me of saying he has wonderful ideas of a thermometer, lactometer &c., when it was a knowledge of the creameries I referred to, and he tries to convey the idea that I either think or said that the above named instruments are not used in testing milk &c., and very generously proffers to instruct me. (He does not state his charge.) With thanks we decline his offer. We do not doubt that T. K. could instruct us in some things which we are better without knowing, and which we do not wish to learn. We know, perhaps as well as Mr. K., the use of those instruments, but can he prove what he insinuates in his first letter that there is a salaried officer attached to each of the four instruments he named and a pair of Newfoundland dogs in connection with each creamery. Then he repudiates the idea of any man trying to establish as a fact that there are no good butter makers in the country. I never stated, or even insinuated, such a thing, I quite believe that a large majority of the women of the country are good butter makers with facilities at all favorable, and that they generally take good care of it while in their possession, therefore it must be spoiled at the store cellars (where the greater part of it now goes) by coming in contact with foul odors, careless handling, &c. Creameries would remedy this if generally instituted. The butter of the Province would be more uniform and of a better quality, hence the profits to the farmers would be all and more than I stated in my first letter. Then he says that the Agricultural College and Experimental Farm is not a benefit to the country generally. It is concerning this that I accused him of deplorable ignorance, as he is the only man I ever heard make such a statement, and I have heard hundreds of men who know more about the institution, the instruction given, the experiments tried, and benefits being derived and to be derived from the same, than T. K. knows, or is ever likely to know, and they all agree that it is a great benefit to the farmer and an honor to the Province, and any honest, intelligent and average informed man will admit the same. He says that I object to the Government assisting in getting seed grain. This is misleaning, I do not object to it assisting in introducing and trying new kinds of seed But I do object to it being requested to bring in seed enough periodically to supply every farmer in the Province. I gave some reasons in my last why I objected and T. K. has not refuted them. I still hold that it it would be satisfactory. Why, sir, years ago when the council of Artemesia brought in grain in this way (under pressing necessity in many instances it gave dissatisfaction, and that amount was small in comparison to what the Provincial Government would have to bring. A safer and better plan than he proposes in his last would be to order through the seedsmen who are responsible for the quality and purity of their seeds, to purchasers who may patronize them, and if they sell bad seed they cannot hide behind the Government as T. K. proposed government agents could. He says that he with thousands of others are advocating a remedy for this great want (change of seed.) I am glad of it. if it be true, but it is to be hoped that few will advocate the course he does of accompliahing such a good object.

In conclusion he boasts of his patriotism. Whether or not a man who speaks so disparagingly of his country's institutions which have been and can be proven to be of so much value, the only institution which has for its sole object the better practical education of the farmer, I say whether or not he has any patriotism to boast of I leave your readers to judge. There are several other statements and insinuations in T. K's. letter which could easily be shown to be groundless, but enough for the present. I have written nothing in replying to T. K which I would not have written had I not known the author of the productions referred to. I therefore remain

Mr. John MacRae, of Wiarton, brother of Finlay MacRae, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, laid an action against the corporation of Wiarton some time ago for injuries received from a defective sidewalk. He recovered $200 and costs. Our village police would do well to make a note of this.

Reynolds & Son are aware of the fact that they do not keep the largest stock of goods in town, but they do know that their goods are new, no old stock, and at present they have a very fine assortment at very low prices, intending purchasers will do well to give us a call before purchasing elsewhere.

As will be seen by Mr. J. P. Marshall's Dentist card in another column, he will be at the Markdale House for the time to come the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month. Mr. Marshall is giving good satisfaction and his practice increasing fast, hence the necessity of coming two days in the month instead of one.

We would refer our readers to Mr. Wm Sargents advertisement in this paper. His loadlifter was patented two years ago and there are now several hundreds of them through the province and the demand for them increasing fast. We believe they are well worthy the attention of farmers, being a labor saving concern, besides enabling a farmer to house at least 4 loads per day more than by the old system.

Ducks, Derrys, Bleached Cottons, Grey Cottons, the cheapest and best at Reynolds & Son.

Mr. John Welsh (late harvest glove manufacturer) of this place, died at his fathers residence, Holland Tp., on Saturday Last, and his remains were followed to their last resting place on Monday by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances. About seven months ago his wife died, the disease was consumption in both cases. Mr. W. went to Florida last summer for the benefit of his health, but returned about two months azo without any improvement and has since gradually grown weaker until the end, as above.

The Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway company have decided to run an evening express train from Toronto to Owen Sound, to connect with the O. S. line of palace steamers for Sault Ste Marie and intermediate points, also to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Thunder Bay for Manitoba and all points in the North West. This will be the cheapest and most direct route to Manitoba.

Readers of the Commercial can not well forget that a large space has for years been taken up by Kendall's advertisements—especially of a certain Spavin Cure. We have had dealings with Dr. Kendall for many years, and we know of some large business houses in cities near by, who have also dealt with him for many years, and the truth is fully and faithfully proven, not only that he is a good honest man, and that his celebrated Spavin cure is not only all that it is recommended to be, but that the English language is not capable of recommending it too highly.
Kendall's Spavin Cure will cure spavins. There are hundreds of cases in which that has been proven to our certain knowledge, but, after all, if any person confines the usefulness of his celebrated medicine to curing spavins alone, they make a big mistake. It is the best medicine known as an outward application for rheumatism in the family. It is good for pains and aches, swellings and lameness, and is just as safely applied to men woman and children as it is to horses. We know that there are other good liniments, but we do believe this spavin cure to be far better than any ever invented. 133-36.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.
Hear what the Deaf say:
It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited..
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.
Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. MAMMOTH Spring Opening!
—AT THE—
MAMMOTH HOUSE!
MARKDALE.

While presenting our compliments to our hosts of customers and the public at large, we desire to make our very best bow in acknowledgement of the liberal patronage we have received since opening in Markdale, and having passed through a most successful winter campaign, the results of which have surpassed our most sanguine expectations, and so contributed to the consolidation of our commercial basis that we are now better than ever prepared to offer our patrons facilities the equal of which have never before been placed within the reach of the public of this section of country.

Our stock which is already exceptionally large and well assorted is being daily augmented by fresh arrivals of Spring Goods. Our stock of Boots and Shoes just opened out and now selling like wild fire cannot be beat in the county, and we respectfully invite an inspection by an intelligent public.

MR. TRIMBLE is now on the market for the purpose of personally selecting such goods as are best calculated to suit this section of the country, and neither pains or expense will be spared in order to place before our customers such a spring stock (when complete) as will astonish and please, and at prices that cannot fail to suit.

Having been thoroughly traind to the business from our childhood, and having enlisted our whole interest and attention towards making it a success, and being thoroughly acquainted with the section of the country in which we are placed, we flatter ourselves that we understand something of the wants of the people and also how to buy so as to be able to sell at such prices as will convince the most sceptical. Our motto is—A LARGE BUSINESS ON SMALL PROFITS—on a cash basis, avoiding the neccessity of charging good customers extra to make good our losses by bad debts. We are prepared to prove to the satisfaction of every man that the old credit system is not only false in principle ruinous, alike to merchant and customer. Selling for cash we can buy for cash and turn our money over and over, thus securing to our customers goods at prices at which we could not buy them wholesale on the old system, and to ourselves the satisfaction of a prosperous business on a safe footing.

An inspection of our Stock is respectfully invited. No trouble to show goods, being desirous of an opportunity to convince you that we do not advertise for the sake of puffing, but are in a position to back up all our assertions with solid facts.

Wind is cheap but not lasting, while truth is indistructable, and in business integrity and honor will win in the end while boastful admiration will fall behind.

To our old customers we would say that we are prepared to surprised even you in quantities, and qualities and prices, while to those who have not yet discovered the advantage of giving us a call we would present a cordial invitation to compare our stock and prices with what they have been used to in the past.

HIS SACRIFICE

OR,

CHAPTER XLII.—(CONTINUED.)

The days and weeks passed brightly, pleasantly, and oh, how happily, to Louie; she had plenty to keep her busy too, calls to make, weddings and receptions and balls to attend, for Mrs. Glenmore was as much a favorite in society as Miss Anthon had been, and Muriel had no intention of allowing her beautiful daughter to settle down into a quiet married life. Muriel missed Louie exceedingly; the house seemed very quiet and lonely without the lovely girl-face, the light step, the low, soft laugh.

"Oh, Louie, I wish you and Roy would come home, and remain until you go to housekeeping," she said, pleadingly. "You have no idea how much I miss you, the house seems so lonely."

But Louie shook her head. She felt that for many reasons it was best that she and Roy did not live with her father and mother. She had seen Percy Evringham several times since her marriage, and that young gentleman had so far recovered from his disappointment that he was able to go and spend many pleasant evenings with Mr. and Mrs. Roy Glenmore, considered Roy a very agreeable fellow, and could hear Louie call her husband "dear," quite unmoved.

Nothing so quickly cures a man of his love for a woman as to see that woman the wife of another man; this cure had worked wonders in Percy Evringham's case. He had loved Louie Anthon—he admired Mrs. Roy Glenmore; Louie Anthon had been the loveliest woman in all the world, Mrs. Roy Glenmore was one of the loveliest. If Louie had died he would have probably been faithful to her memory as long as he lived; possibly he might never have thought of loving another woman, but instead of dying she had married, and that made all the difference in the world.

He made a flying trip to New York every little while, and it generally happened that he spent most of his time while in the city with Miss Brentwood. But surely there was nothing particularly strange or unnatural in that, for was not Aline his truest friend? had she not sympathized with and comforted him in his sorrow?

Percy did not stop to think why it was that as soon as he had arrived in New York he was restless and uneasy until he saw Aline; he did not ask himself why the evenings he passed in her society seemed so very pleasant and so marvellously short.

He was taking dinner with Roy and Louie at the Brunswick one evening, and in the course of conversation, Louie, speaking about Aline, said demurely, but with a gleam of mischief in her eyes:

"I suppose, Percy, you have met Raleigh Thornton at the Brentwoods?"

Percy shook his handsome head in the negative.

"No?" murmured Louie, looking meditatively at the tiny bubbles that were rising from the bottom of her glass of champagne. "Why that is strange; I thought of course you had met him, and I was going to ask you how you liked him."

Percy looked interested, but not particularly pleasantly interested.

"Who is he, anyway?" he asked.

"Oh, he is a great friend of Aline's," answered Louie, innocently; "he has been very attentive to her all winter. I do wish you could see him, Percy; he is magnificent looking, is considered one of the handsomest men in society, and his manners are simply charming."

"So?" said Percy, with a nonchalance that was a perfect bit of acting considering his feelings just at that moment.

Percy did not enjoy the remainder of that dinner, and it was a shame, too, for it was as perfect in its way as it is possible for a dinner to be. He declined Mr. and Mrs. Glenmore's warm invitation to accompany them to the theatre, pleading a previous engagement; and though he did not say it was with Aline, Roy and Louie knew perfectly well that it was.

"My darling Louie," said Roy, after they had parted with Percy, "do you think——"

"I don't think anything," said Louie, laughing merrily as she interrupted him, "only—wait and see."

And Percy, wending his way up Fifth Avenue, was in not a particularly amiable frame of mind.

"Really, I shouldn't think Aline would encourage a fellow like that," he muttered. "What does she want this Raleigh Thornton, or whatever his name is, hanging around her for if she don't love him?"

"But perhaps she does," whispered a little small voice, and Percy started suddenly as though he had received a pailful of ice-water full in the face, drew a long breath, and walked along very quickly. He found Aline looking very beautiful in her evening-dress of wine color and peach-pink, a rose flush upon her cheeks, the light in her great dusky eyes that had come into them—well, since Percy had taken to visiting New York so often. But she was not alone. Lounging gracefully on one of the embroidered satin couches, was a remarkably handsome young gentleman whom Aline introduced as Mr. Thornton.

Really Percy was very disagreeable that evening, more disagreeable than you would ever imagine handsome Percy could possibly be; and Raleigh Thornton was certainly not to blame for thinking Mr. Evringham about as thoroughly disagreeable a young fellow as he had ever met in all his life. He would not take any part in the conversation; when he spoke, he addressed his remarks to Aline exclusively, he completely ignored Mr. Thornton, yet though he scarcely looked at him he was obliged to acknowledge to himself that the young New Yorker was handsome, was witty and entertaining.

At last Raleigh Thornton took his departure, and having reminded Aline that she had promised to go with him to a German the following evening. After he had gone, and the heavy street door had closed with a clang after him, Percy suddenly rose from the chair and seated himself by Aline's side on one of the little couches.

"Aline," he said, rather fiercely, tugging viciously at his silky mustache, "do you care for that fellow?"

Oh, the relief in his tone! "that fellow," it was decided, to say the least.

"Do I care for him, Percy? I like him very much, if that is what you mean."

"But I don't mean that at all, Aline, do you love him?"

Half indignantly she soared up at him; then her eyes drooped quickly, a bright flush swept over her face.

"Because, Aline"—just a quiver of earnestness in his voice—"I don't want you to love him—nor any man—but me."

"And you are not surprised?" murmured Aline, the next day when she had told Louie the news.

"Not a particle, dear—and oh, Aline, I am so glad he loves you."

"So am I," said Aline, softly.

About the first of February Richard Brandon came home, and it was indeed a warm, loving welcome he received from Roy and Louie. He dined with them the day he arrived, and after dinner when they were alone together—just those three—in Louie's pretty private parlor, he said—with that rarely tender smile of his lighting up his face:

"I brought you something, Louie, but I am going to give Roy what I brought him, first."

He took from his pocket a sealed letter, which he laid in Roy's hand.

Wonderingly the young man broke open the envelope; drawing out the sheet of paper it inclosed, he unfolded it, and read what was written upon it, and as he read his face grew white as death, his breath came quick and fast, and when he had finished, he carried one hand to his head as though he was dazed.

"Uncle Richard—it cannot be true—it cannot be that I am——"

"Lord Fairleigh? Yes," said Richard Brandon, and in his eyes glad tears were standing. "It is true, my boy, you are Lord Fairleigh of Fairleigh Towers, Derbyshire, England. Louie, my darling, you must be the first one to congratulate him."

She looked from one to the other of them helplessly.

"I cannot understand, Uncle Richard—I do not see how my Roy can be—Lord Fairleigh."

And taking her little trembling hands in his own strong ones, while Roy held the letter from the London lawyers—Messrs. Gresham & Barham—Richard Brandon told them the whole story, and when he had finished, it was plain and clear to them both.

Roy's father, Cyril Fairleigh, was the third son of Lord Reginald Fairleigh, and, notwithstanding the fact that he was the youngest, was his father's favorite son, being very much like, in face and disposition, his mother, a lovely woman, whom Lord Fairleigh passionately loved.

Just after he came of age, Cyril fell violently in love with a young girl who was employed by one of his mother's lady friends as governess to her young children.

This young girl, Lilian Forsyth, was a lovely, gentle girl, the only child of a North of England curate, who, dying almost penniless, left his motherless child to struggle on as best she could. Life was not very bright to her—poor child. Her lovely face, with its soft sad eyes and sorrowful mouth, first attracted Cyril Fairleigh's attention, and in a very short time it had become the one face in all the world to him.

When Lord Fairleigh heard that his favorite son was paying very marked attention to Lady Harcourt's governess, he was greatly disturbed, and sending for Cyril, told him what he had heard, and suggested that he should leave England for a time, travel on the Continent until he had recovered from his boyish infatuation—for that was what Lord Fairleigh considered it. What was his horror and surprise when Cyril answered, quietly but very firmly, that he loved Miss Forsyth, had already asked her to be his wife, and, what is more, had every intention of marrying her. In vain Lord Fairleigh argued and pleaded, neither his arguments nor his prayers could change Cyril's resolution. At last he lost his temper, and, in a towering passion of rage, told him that the day he married that low, designing creature, as he designated poor Lilian—he ceased to be a son of his.

"You can choose between us—your father and that low-born girl," he said, "but I swear if you choose her you must abide by your choice; if you marry her I never want to look upon your face again, to hear your name spoken; you will no longer be a son of mine."

It is quite needless to say he did marry her—for love of her he was willing to give up home, friends, everything, even name; for the day after their marriage he sailed for America under the name of Glenmore.

In the course of time, Reginald, Lord Fairleigh, died, his oldest son succeeded him, and for ten years had lived in the enjoyment of the immense Fairleigh estate: then he was taken down with some organic disease—the same which had killed Roy's father, and which had been fatal to many of the Fairleighs—and dying childless, the title and earldom had fallen in direct succession to Arthur, the second son. Lord Arthur's two sons died in infancy, and he himself had died a sudden violent death; he was run away with by a span of high-spirited horses, thrown from the carriage and was picked up dead.

Then it was that Cyril, the youngest son, was remembered—he had not been entirely forgotten, there were many that recollected Lord Reginald's favorite boy. A search was commenced for him, advertisements inserted in the newspapers of every country—it was one of those advertisements that Richard Brandon saw. Cyril Fairleigh was dead, gone like the rest, but his son—Lilian Forsyth's child and his—was alive; so it was that Roy came into his inheritance.

Richard Brandon had no trouble in proving that Roy was Cyril Fairleigh's child. Perhaps poor Cyril had thought such a thing might come to pass, for in that box Richard Brandon had treasured so carefully were so many things that went to show Henry Glenmore and Cyril Fairleigh were one and the same. A watch inscribed, "To my dear boy, from his affectionate father, Reginald Fairleigh," a ring that had belonged to his mother before her marriage, with her maiden name engraved inside of it, besides the letters and the wedding certificate. Yes, Roy was Lord Fairleigh—that was plainly proved.

To say that everybody was surprised when the wonderful news came out is a very feeble way of expressing it. To think that Roy Glenmore was a full-fledged English lord, heir to one of the oldest titles, and one of the largest estates in England!

People felt as though they had been entertaining an angel unawares, and it was quite marvellous how many remembered that they had always liked him so much, had always thought there was something so distingue about him.

And Mrs. Van Alstyne was in a seventh heaven of delight.

"I know I could not have felt so perfectly delighted if I had discovered I was a lord myself," she said, enthusiastically, and when she saw Muriel she almost choked herself laughing.

"Muriel Anthon, do you remember the day we were talking about him, and I said for anything I knew to the contrary he might have Norman blood in his veins?" she said, hysterically. "And just think he has got Norman blood in his veins—the dear, dear boy."

Muriel was calmly happy, conscious that her daughter had acquitted herself admirably, had made an everlasting name for herself in society, and there was just a little pardonable pride in her voice and manner when she spoke of "my daughter, Lady Fairleigh."

The third week in February Roy and Louie sailed for England, as it was all important that Lord Fairleigh should take care of the fortune which had so suddenly and unexpectedly come into his hands.

CHAPTER XLIII.

The March of that year was an unusually stormy and severe one. For days at a time it rained unceasingly, and the gales were terrible—there were many shipwrecks on the coast. March is always a trying month, this March was particularly trying; if it had started out with the resolution to outdo its predecessors in point of disagreeability, it had certainly succeeded, for everybody said it was, without exception, the coldest, windiest, stormiest and most thoroughly unpleasant March they had ever experienced, and this is saying a great deal.

One dreary, rainy afternoon, Muriel Anthon was sitting in her favorite chair in her pretty boudoir, embroidering in a slow, languid way, quite unusual to her. She had not been feeling well for three or four days; early in the month she had caught a heavy cold, and it did not seem to have entirely left her; she felt really miserable this afternoon, more miserable than she would acknowledge to herself. There was a tight feeling about her chest—a feeling of heat and weight rather than pain; her head ached, and from time to time she coughed—a dry, hacking cough, and that was something very unusual for her.

"I hope I am not going to be sick," she said to herself, as a creeping chill passed over her, and shivering in the warm, flower-scented room, she drew her chair nearer to the fire, dropping her embroidery, and laying her head wearily against the satin cushions. "I must have caught more cold," she continued. "I am sorry, too, for it does worry Russel so, even when I am the least bit sick; I shall not tell him I do not feel well. It is only the weather, I guess; how can any one feel well such wretched weather as we have been having right straight along since the first of the month? I shall be so glad when May comes; I always detested March and April."

And then she fell to thinking dreamily of the summer which was to come, and for which she had made all her plans. She was to spend it in England, and how anxious she was to see Louie in her own beautiful home.

When an hour or so later Arundel came in, he found her still sitting in the low chair before the fire, whose rosy gleams alone lighted up the room which had slowly filled with the dusky twilight shadows.

"And why is my darling sitting alone in the dark?" he asked tenderly, kneeling down beside her and winding his arms about her.

"It grew dark so suddenly I did not notice," she answered, dreamily. "I guess you may light the gas, Russel dear."

But when the room was bright with the gas light, which gained a soft pink tinge in passing through the rose-colored globes of the chandelier, Arundel saw that the beautiful face which was his sunshine, his life, was deeply flushed, the velvety eyes dull and heavy, and his lips were white as he said, oh, so anxiously.

"Muriel, my darling, you are not feeling well—you are ill!"

She smiled a little tender, but languid smile.

"No, Russel, I guess not very ill. I have a headache, that is all, and to-morrow it will be gone."

But on the morrow Muriel's headache was not gone—it was still there—a dull headache, and there was the same feeling of weight and heat upon her chest. And yet she thought nothing of it, laughed when Arundel anxiously proposed sending for the family physician, saying:

"It is nothing, dear, nothing but a little cold; and I shall be all over it in a day or two. Don't look so worried, Russel."

But the next day Arundel knew that she was worse; her breath came quick, the little dry cough was more frequent, her small hands burning hot, and terribly alarmed—a terrible fear upon him—he sent for the doctor.

Dr. Marston had been the family physician for years, and when he came and looked down at Muriel as she lay upon a small velvet couch in her room, he shook his head gravely, saying to Arundel, who sat beside her:

"Why didn't you send for me before?"

Ah, why had he not! All Arundel's heart was filled with passionate regret that he had not done so, and that terrible fear grew upon him, a fear of something, what—he dared not ask himself.

He followed the doctor out of the room, and in the hall laid a detaining hand upon his arm.

"Doctor, what is it?" he asked, in a strained, unnatural voice, and the face he lifted to Dr. Marston's was drawn and ashy pale.

"My dear Mr. Anthon, don't be alarmed," the doctor answered quickly. "It is pneumonia. I wish I had been called in before; but still I have every hope that I shall be able to bring your wife out of it all right."

"You must doctor, you must; if she should die—— Great God!"

He leaned against the wall, shaking in every limb; great drops standing thick upon his forehead, a violet shade gathering about his mouth, and Dr. Marston more moved than he cared to show by the sight of the mute agony, said briskly:

"Oh, you mustn't take on like this, you know; it will never, never do. I shall have you on my hands as well as your wife."

With a mighty effort Arundel recovered his self-control.

"Doctor, you will not let her die? You do not know what she is to me—she is my life!"

Dr. Marston turned his head suddenly away; the wistful agony in those dark eyes was more than he could bear.

"Of course I will not let her die," he said, cheerily.

But as he drove away from the house, the kind-hearted physician murmured to himself:

"I believe it would well-nigh kill him if she should not recover. I wish I had been called in before; he has no idea how ill she is."

Surely Dr. Marston worked faithfully over Muriel; everything that he could do he did, but what does human skill avail against the inevitable? When the fiat has gone forth from the great throne what can we do! Nothing, nothing! and oh, the agony of such helplessness! Does earth hold anything more bitter than to see the life of our best beloved ebbing, ebbing, and to know that we are powerless?

Day after day she grew worse—every day weaker.

God knows Arundel Anthon had sinned, and God knows, and He alone, how he suffered, as day after day, night after night, he watched beside her—the woman in whom his life began and would end. The knowledge came upon them at last—those who loved her so—that she was going from them; and over the sea a message went to Louie—a message telling her that in this world never again would she see her beautiful mother.

One morning Muriel had asked to have the curtains drawn aside that the sunlight might come into the room. It was a beautiful April morning, and as the warm spring sunshine crept through the windows and fell in bars of gold upon the carpet, a smile played upon Muriel's lips.

"How bright and warm the sunshine is!" she whispered faintly to Arundel; "the winter has gone, summer is coming, dear, and we are going to England, you and I, to see Louie—my dear little Louie. Oh, Russel, I wish the warm, beautiful, sunshiny summer would make haste and come."

With Arundel's arms around her, her head upon his breast, Muriel fell asleep, and from that sleep she awake not in this world.

It was late in the afternoon of the day after she died that Arundel went into the quiet, darkened room where she was laying. It was utterly beyond human power to compute what his agony had been since he had laid her down out of his arms—dead; it is impossible to measure such agony, nor are there any words in which it could be described.

During the last two hours he had been alone in his library writing; he had written two letters, one to Louie, the other to Richard Brandon—and now the end was at hand.

Standing beside the quiet form, he looked down at the beautiful white face with the wonderful mystery of death upon it.

They were alone—he and she, just as they had been so many times before; but this time she did not answer, though he called her by all the dear names she had so loved to hear, and the pale lips did not move, though he kissed them so many, many times. At last he took from his vest pocket a small vial, and there was a strange look upon his face—a look almost exulting, as he raised it to his lips and drank of its contents.

Then a strange scene followed. Lifting the quiet figure in his arms, he carried it to a broad couch that stood in a far corner of the room, and laid it down—so tenderly—upon the velvet cushions; then lying down beside it, he drew the lovely head to its old resting place upon his breast, and folded his arms about her—his beautiful dead Muriel.

"I knew you would be lonely without me, darling," he murmured, pressing his lips to the marble-cold forehead, "and now we will sleep together."

So they found him, when hours later, alarmed by the profound silence in the chamber of death!—they forced the lock and entered. Just previous to going into that room he had given orders that no one should disturb him, saying that he wished to be alone with dead. But they did not disturb him when they went in—Arundel Anthon was beyond the reach of earthly disturbance.

The summer for which Muriel had longed, came—the bright, warm sunshiny summer; but it only bestarred with flowers the grass that grew over her grave.

It was nearing the close of a lovely June day, and the many windows of Fairleigh Towers were gleaming like burnished brass in the red rays of the setting sun. On the velvety green lawn a pleasant party was assembled. There was Roy and Louie, Percy and Aline—who, with their little four-year-old boy, Percy Evringham, junior, were on a visit to England—and Richard Brandon; while the children—five-year-old Russel, three-year-old Muriel, and little Percy—were playing together, running here and there, their sweet childish voices ringing clearly on the soft air.

Very beautiful was Louie, her eyes soft and bright with happiness; though in repose there came an expression upon her face which told she knew what sorrow was—and she did know.

In the letter which he had written to her just previous to his death, Arundel—moved, who can say by what impulse—had told her of the false part he had played so successfully, told her the whole story, that he was not her father, and who her father was. Of course the knowledge had been a terrible shock, and in connection with her grief at her mother's death, had for a time almost prostrated her; then came her grandmother's death, and within a year after, her grandfather's, and she had loved them very much. Yes, Louie knew a sorrow, but still she could not be wretched or unhappy with such a husband and as she had.

Percy and Aline were perfectly happy, they adored each other; and Percy could have been so happy with Louie as he married her as he was with Aline; for was especially adapted to him, there was her nature that which supplied all that lacking in his.

And Richard Brandon—for the world knew him by that name, and by it would always know him. Four years before he yielded to Roy's and Louie's earnest that he should retire from business, England, and make their home his so he should live. Everybody loved honored him, and the poor for miles spoke reverently and tenderly of him; body but the angels really knew how good he done in the world.

The sun went down, over the distant mountain purple shadows were falling.

"Come," said Louie, "we must go and so talking and laughing still they moved slowly toward the house.

All but Richard Brandon; he lingered eyes fixed upon the western sky still blaze of rose color and gold.

"Uncle Richard, take Muriel up—she is so tired."

The childish voice roused him; he lifted her in his arms—little Muriel leigh—his grand child, the child he so dearly and whose eyes and hair were like those of the woman for whom she been named.

"Why you cry?" asked the little girl ously, for looking up at him she had the tears in his eyes.

But he only kissed her; he did not tell he had been thinking of a grave far over sea, wondering whether the flowers planted upon it were growing.

"Don't cry," said the child, with both her arms around his neck. "Muriel loves you, Uncle Richard, loves you much."

He kissed the sweet child-mouth, many as he brushed his tears away:

"Dear little Muriel!"

Then with the small golden head upon his breast he walked slowly up winding path to the house.

Oh, noble, patient, faithful heart, somewhere—somewhere, thou shalt peace!

(THE END.)

Success and Mediocrity.

All men, we may be sure, prefer prizes of life to the blanks; but we to assume therefore that all men will the prizes at the price at which they be had. Whatever the special prize which commends itself to a man's whether it be wealth, or fame, or a recognized position in the eyes of world, he soon finds out that it is not gained by wishing for it. It must be if at all, by hard work; by a struggle, which will be doubtful for time, and which may be very possibly cessful in the end. There are victors vanquished to be found among the petitors, in life's race. To some confident in their own resources, and ed with an energy and determination which can carry them over all difficult there is a positive charm in the choice road not distinctly marked out in and in which dangers and adventure present themselves at any moment. are resolved to succeed, and they do succeed. Possunt quia posse They may be beaten back a thousand but they push through and come the goal. They Settled.

Two men were wrangling in front of City Hall the other day, when one of called out:

"I tell you I don't owe you no $5."

"I say you do!"

"And I won't pay it!"

"Then I'll sue you!"

At this point a pedestrian halted and quired of the one:

"Do you honestly owe him?"

"Not a penny, sir!"

"And will you sue him for $5?" he asked of the other.

"I will!"

"Give him seven dollars," counseled pedestrian to the debtor—"give him and be glad to. If he sues he'll get verdict, and your expenses will least ten dollars. Give him seven thankful that you are beating two jussice and a constable, six jury two witnesses out of their fees."

A satisfactory settlement was the spot.

Wonderful Ice Caves.

One of the greatest natural wonders of Europe is the Hungarian ice cave. At the foot of the highest group of the Carpathian chain lies the Gomitar of Gomar, a district of singular beauty and variety, in which are mountains on whose summit grows the Arctic lichen and the pine, while at their base tobacco, Indian corn and melons flourish. It is in this country, within a few miles of the town of Dobsham—that the newly-discovered ice caverns are situated. The existence of these extraordinary caves was well known, but although situated at the low elevation of three thousand five hundred feet, where snow rests only in winter, it was left to a youth named Ruffiny to explore these secret recesses of the earth. Having provided himself with everything that could be imagined necessary for such an expedition, he entered the chasm, and working his way over blocks of ice and a chaos of debris, which in the course of ages had accumulated there, he became lost for a time in the darkness of a new world. With infinite difficulty he reached what appeared to him a frozen lake, and returned to his point of departure. His companions now joined him, and penetrated still further into these icy solitudes. Not alone do these caves contain pillars and waterfalls of ice, but three walls are studded with thousands of ice structures, hexangular in form, from a half to one inch in diameter, which, clustered together, resembled anemones and other flowers scintillating like diamonds in the magnesium light."

Curious Attempt at Blackmailing.

A correspondent informs the London Times of a romantic incident which has recently occured in a prosperous London suburb. A devoted young High Church curate, of intetesting appearance and great popularity in his district, was waited upon by a young lady of considerable attractions, but with an air of deep melancholy and clad in a somewhat ascetic garb. She invited him to her house and revealed to him a fatal secret. She had conceived a deep, a passionate, love for the curate himself. She knew, she said, that her passion was hopeless; he, in his devotion to the Church, for which she loved him all the more, had vowed himself to a life of celibacy, and she would carry her attachment to the grave which she felt was not far off. But there was one kindness which was in his power to grant her, the remembrance of which would bring consolation to her dark and weary path. Would he, before they parted give her but one kiss? After some timidity and agitation the young curate, touched with pity, complied. The lady shed another tear, bade him adieu in a hollow voice, and he departed. A few days afterward he received a neat little parcel, gracefully tied with a piece of blue ribbon, and on opening it found an instantaneous photograph (cabinet size) of himself kissing the young lady. Accompanying this was a communication from the fair creature herself that there were eleven more copies, and that he might have the whole dozen at £20 apiece. Should he not be in want of them it was her intent on to dispose of them in another quarter. Negotiations on the subject are said to be proceeding.

Discontent and Duty.

A good many people spend all their life in hunting for a place in this world that they never were intended to fill. They never settle down to any sort of restful or contented feeing. What they are doing now is not by any means the work that is suited to their abilities. They have a sunny ideal of a very noble life which they would like to reach, in which their powers would have free scope, and where they could make a very bright record. But in their present condition they cannot do much of anything and there is little use to try. Their life is a humdrum and a prosy outline, and they can accomplish nothing really worthy and beautiful. So they go on discontented with their own lot, and sighing for another; and while they sigh the years glide away, and soon they will come to to the end, to find that they have missed every opportunity of doing anything worthy of a rational being on the passage to eternity. The truth is, one's vocation is never some far-off possibility. It is always the simple round of duties that the passing hour brings. No day is common-place if we only had eyes to see its splendor. There is no duty that comes to our hand but brings us the possibility of kingly service.—Exchange.

Rash Judgments.

We are daily tempted and solicited into rash and self-fettering judgments. The mental interests of society are too few to suffer personal character and faculty to remain uncanvassed. Conversation runs on persons rather than on things, and you are directly asked for an opinion. Great evils come out of such questions. In the first place you may have no opinion, nor be entitled to have one. Your opinions of me slowly and silently grow up in you; and scarcely has this process begun when you are suddenly asked to define them. Yet it is probable, such are our habits, that you will not have the simplicity to resist the snare. You will be hurried into precipitate judgment—mere first impressions will be hardened into permanent conclusion—you will presumptuously speak of the deep inner nature or unknown capacity in a man from slight and insufficient hints—you will commit yourself to some defined view of him, and never again have the free privilege of open, candid, receptive intercourse unbiassed by your own rash judgment. There is a rudeness and irreverence of nature in thus assuming to judge any man. It is a barren attitude. When we have once judged a man we have as it were closed his access to us at all unexpected avenues. We are pledged to one view of him—he is no more an infinite possibility to us—we have measured him, and never more can look upon him, with the freshness and reverence of an undefined hope.

Immense reservoirs of naptha have been struck at Balachana and Sabuntscha, in the neighborhood of Baku, in Russia. There are at present twenty springs in full flow. The gush is described as extraordinary. The price at present is a little less than two copecks per pood, or a fraction less than one halfpenny per thirty-six pounds English.

TORONTO'S BUSINESS HOUSES.

Their Activity and Enterprise.

The business of Toronto both in the wholesale and retail trade, has grown till its development has become almost a proverb. Not only have its buildings on almost every leading street undergone vast enlargements and improvements of late years, but the amount of business transacted within the same walls has also greatly developed. A representative of TRUTH while taking a stroll down King street east was much struck by these facts on paying a visit to the dry goods establishment of Messrs. Petley & Petley, whose well known emblem of the Golden Griffin is a prominent landmark on eastern King street. To all outside appearances Messrs. Petley & Petley's store does not seem to be any better than it was five years ago, but when one enters, their improvements—not only in the extent and character of the business but in the appearance of the place—are visible on every hand. The interior of the establishment has, in fact, undergone a complete transformation. The old dull looking walls of former days have been replaced by elegant and spacious walls, whose light and delicate tints are rendered brighter by floods of light from three large skylights, in addition to the front and rear windows, while a fine outfit of gasaliers must render the scene a brilliant one at night. While the old portions of the building have thus been improved, they have been extended by a space of 55x 90 feet to the rear, giving to the house—which now contains an immense cellarage stored with goods—about double its former capacity. These improvements have been effected at a cost of about $9,000, and, as showing the energy of the presiding genius of the Golden Griffin, have been carried on through the winter weather while still meeting the regular demands of the trade that pours into the place. Mr. Petley seems to be a man of unusual energy and perseverance. Since he and his brother purchased the business from Messrs. Hughes Bros. last September—then conducted under the name of Petley & Co—they have had great success. By persistently bringing their claims before the public through the press, and maintaining those claims by the quality of goods they advertise, they have become known throughout the country as perhaps no other firm ha . Mr. J. W Petley is now a permanent resident of Manchester, England, where, adopting the system pursued by several of the largest wholesale houses, they have the benefit of a first-hand knowledge of the English markets—an advantage which is seen in the superior style and quality of their imported goods. The first millinery opening of the new firm took place on Wednesday and was attended by crowds of people, who seemed to admire the elegance and taste of the establishment and its stock. The several departments, such as the millinery and mantles, silks, fancy goods, dress goods, staple goods, hosiery and gloves, gents' furnishings, carpets, linoleums, oil cloths, &c., (the stock of the latter always being one of the finest in the city) are stocked with entirely new goods, and the firm with their present advantages must do a heavy spring trade.

Mrs. Caudle in Zuni.

K'ia-wu troubled herself much with her husband's actions. They usually slept along the opposite side of my little room. Night after night, hour after hour, I have heard her, in the peculiar sing-song tone of her race and sex, lecture her silent governor. The darkness would grow deeper, the embers on the hearth fade to ashes, but the theme lost neither interest nor voice. It used sorely to provoke me: and in my own language, hopelessly striving to sleep, I would sometimes curse both the persistency of the Zuni Caudle and the silence of the matrimonial stoic. "Ho! the younger brother is thoughtful; to-morrow I will fix his bed better," it would say; and the governor, filling the exclamation with the most perfect understanding of the situation, would ejaculate, "Humph!" but no more. Undisturbed, the current would then flow on until later; by cousiderable distance of the stars, the tone would die away. A moment of dead silence, then a cough from the governor, followed by the bland inquiry:

"Is that all?"

"What more should I say, talkless?" the old woman would reply, in a most injured and ill-controlled tone.

"Well, then" (with a yawn), "let's us go tos'eep, old girl (o'-ka-si ki), for it is time, and the younger brother is restless." With which he would turn over, cough again, and lapse into silence, hopeless to the tongue-weary woman, as evinced by her long-continued, half-smothered sobs.—Frank H. Cushing, in the May Century.

Happy Hours.

An accurate observer says: Mankind are always happier for having been happy; so that if you make them happy now, you make them happy twenty years hence from the memory of it. A childhood passed with a mixture of rational indulgence, under fond and wise parents, diffuses over the whole life a feeling of calm pleasure; and in extreme old age is the very last remembrance which time can erase from the mind of man. No enjoyment, however inconsiderable, is confined to the present moment. A man is the happier for life for having made an agreeable tour, or lived any length of time with pleasant people, or lived any considerable interval of innocent pleasure, which contributes to render of men so inattentive to the scenes before them, and carries them back to a world that is passed, and to scenes which are never to be renewed again.—Dickens.

An Answered Prayer

The little children of the Rev. Mr. Marshall had been very ill, and one Sunday morning it was feared they could not survive the day. All human aid seeming futile, the parents determined to invoke Divine help, and accordingly two solemn services were held, at which prayers were offered for the restoration and preservation of the dying little ones. The prayers must have been heard, for, in the evening the little sufferers fell into a tranquil sleep, from which they subsequently awakened so refreshed and improved that no doubts are now entertained as to their recovery. Their devout parents have never questioned the efficacy of prayer, but now more firmly than ever before have they an abiding faith in the mercy and goodness of Him to whom no sufferer appeals in vain.—Denver (Col.) Tribune.

FOR THE
KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132-84.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c.. resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

WOLSELEY.

A correspondent sends the following, which we insert with the request that more be given us for publication:—

Mr. R. Ninnons had a very fine piano shipped to his own address last week, and as there is some very fine young ladies in that section of country, no doubt our bachelors will often dream of "music in the air."

Wolseley excels in good water, abundance of wood, best land in the North-West Territory, and beautiful scenery, as we are only six miles from the far-famed Qu'Appelle river and valley One proof of my statement is that a great number of the ex mounted police have chosen Wolseley for their lot, after traversing the whole of the territory. No other class of men were better able to judge of location and soil. There is a great deal of land open for homstead entry north of the city, and a number of townships will be in the market early in the spring. We are looking for Wolseley to have more emigrants than any other station on the C. P. R. Our postmaster and general merchant, Mr. McAlster, has enlarged his building, that will give good accommodation for a fine stock. Messrs. Cross & Dill are doing a good trade in general merchandise, and last but not least is H. L. Dodds, who has a beautiful homestead in the suburbs, called East Glenelg Farm as well as a fine store in town, which would do credit to Regina or many other points.

IN THE PATH OF A CYCLONE

Great Destruction of Life and Property in the South

Many Persons Killed and Injured. Houses Torn to Pieces and Forests Levelled.

The recent terrible cyclone, of which we have had brief telegraphic information, appears to have done a frightful amount of damage. The following details speak for themselves.

WESSON, Miss.—A frightful cyclone passed over this place and over the town of Beauregard, one mile above, at about 4 P.M. yesterday. The wind for the past three days had been blowing a gale, and the lowering clouds indicated a storm. Its approach was heralded by deep rumbling sounds, the windows in the dwellings shaking with violence, and many anticipated an earthquake. The thunder roared and the lightning flashed with alarming vividness. Fences were torn down, and trees which had stood the storm for years were uprooted and cast 100 yards away. East of the railroad in Wessou the damage was slight, but in the western portion of the town the destruction was awful in its character.

As soon as the storm had somewhat abated the church bells were heard ringing, and people were seen rushing toward West Wesson, the rain in the meantime pouring in torrents. Reaching Peach Orchard street, an indescribable scene was witnessed. The street is lined with a large number of houses, in which the operatives of the Mississippi Mills are domiciled, and here the greatest destruction occured. Dwellings were torn to pieces, and a pine forest just beyond the limits of the town was BLOWN OUT OF EXISTENCE.

The work of removing the dead and extricating the wounded from the ruins was soon begun. Calvin Reed, who lived in the neighborhood, died of excitement. The number of killed is estimated at twelve. Two or three children are missing, and 150 or 200 dwellings have been blown down. The escapes from some of the dwellings were miraculous. The number of people with broken limbs is estimated at seventy-five.

Dead bodies lay out in the violent rain for more than an hour after the cyclone. The dead are now all laid out, and coffins are being made for their reception. Among the killed in Wesson are Mrs. Causty and her two children, and several children of J. E. Gibson, one of whom was found crushed under a chimney. Two bodies found were so mangled as to be unrecognizable. A little boy was found in the woods, several hundred yards away, unhurt.

Beauregard, which is only a mile from here, lay in the direct path of the cyclone. The scene there is appalling, and the town may be said to no longer exist. It is, in truth, a mass of ruins, with scarcely a house standing. Uptorn trees lie strewn on all sides. Two brick stores, the largest in the place, were swept away, and the timbers scattered for miles around. Even out in the country two miles and a half dwellings were blown away. The railroad depot was carried away, and not a sign of it remains.

On the Natchez and Columbus Railroad, the town of Tillman was destroyed, and several were killed and wounded. On the Vicksburg and Meridan Railroad the town of Lawrence suffered terribly. The reports from other places and from the country show that the storm was wide spread and very destructive. Telegraph lines were blown down for miles.

At Tillman the town is in ruins, and property of all kinds in the neighborhood is greatly damaged.

Beauregard is a perfect wreck, not one house having escaped.

Lawrence suffered heavily in loss of property, but no lives were lost. Aside from the losses sustained in the towns mentioned, the devastation of the country lying in the path of the hurricane is very great, crops, farm houses, and, in some cases, human life being destroyed.

One year ago yesterday the town of Monticello, lying six miles south of the track of this storm, was destroyed by a tornado.

A cyclone passed eight miles north of Columbus, Miss., near Tibbee Station, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and much damage was done to houses and fences. At Cook's plantation, on the Tombigbee River, nearly every house was demolished. Across the river fourteen houses were destroyed on Dan Hutchinson's plantation, but no lives were lost. At Caledonia, twelve miles north of Columbus, the storm seems to have concentrated its fury. Every fence for miles was blown away, trees were blown down and carried before the wind like chaff, and many houses were torn to pieces. An estimable young man, while bending over his wife and was struck on the head by a falling beam and instantly killed. Others were dangerously wounded.

A terrific gale from the northwest struck West Point, Miss., accompanied by torrents of rain and the largest hail ever seen there. The Court House, Lawyers' Row, the Central Hotel, the Cotton Exchange Office, the Olympic saloon, the Henry House, W. A. Bibb's store, and Flanagan Hall were all unroofed and otherwise damaged. A barber shop was partly blown down, fences and trees were prostrated, and much damage was done. No lives were lost.

A most destructive cyclone passed two miles north of Starkville, Miss., blowing houses all to pieces and tearing up fences and trees. A negro woman and a child was killed, and several whites and blacks who were wounded will probably die. All the buildings on the plantations of Dr. E. P. Connell and Dr. J. S. Montgomery were blown away, and the corn and fodder that was in the barn was scattered. W. H. Curry's dwelling was blown off, leaving nothing but the floor. Several fine cows were killed. The wind came from the southwest, going in a northeast direction. It struck one mile south of Aberdeen, at a place called Freedman's Town, blowing away ten houses there, killing ten negroes and wounded about thirty. We have had a signal office here for a year, and have had two storms in the last month, but the observers have never predicted a storm yet.

A tornado passed about one mile east of Red Lick, Miss. The track of the storm was about 200 yards wide. Everything in its path was carried away. Cabins were blown down and much damage was done to crops and fences. In one cabin were five people, who say that and carried away, leaving them standing unhurt on the floor.

A special to the Savannah Morning News from Eastman, Ga., says that a cyclone passed over that town doing great damage. The house of John Register was blown down and his two children killed. Samuel Harris's house was demolished and his wife and children badly injured.

Special despatches to the Macon, Ga., Telegraph and Messenger report a terrific cyclone in southwest Georgia, attended with a large loss of life and property. Not less than twenty deaths are reported, while the number of injured cannot be estimated. In number of instances there is a total loss of farm houses, residences, cattle, and produce.

Specials to the Atlanta Constitutional report the passage of a cyclone through the lower part of Georgia with destructive results, also very general wind and heavy rains all over the State. The lightning was continuous, and kept the night so lit up that one could read by the light. Fences and dams were washed away, entailing great loss, and many houses were blown down. A despatch from Albany reports eight persons killed and about twenty-five wounded. Eastman despatches report two persons killed. The track of the cyclone was through Dougherty county, and is reported a quarter of a mile wide. Fully $10,000 damage was done in Chattanoga by the storm. The depot, dwellings, and stores were unroofed, fences thrown down and trees uprooted. Reports of serious damage to towns in north Alabama have reached here.

The region of Tuscaloosa, Ala., was visited by a heavy storm of wind and rain, which continued until midnight. The Black Warrior River has risen thirty feet in the past twenty-four hours, and is now fifty feet below low water mark, and is still rising. Hundreds of acres of the richest lands in the Warrior bottom that have been already planted are submerged, and planters will suffer heavy loss.

A tornado passed up the Maple River Valley early last evening, following closely along the spur of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, which strikes off from Manly Junction. The Danbury Catholic church was wrecked, three houses were blow down, and other minor damages were inflicted. No lives were lost so far as known.

A special from Dunlay, Harris county, says that a terrible tornado passed near that place, carrying away many farm houses and barns, and killing a great quantity of stock. Trees were torn out by the roots and outbuildings carried away. Some loss of life is reported. The track of the tornado was northward through Monona and Woodbury counties.

Flirting by Telephone.

Among the employes at the Central office is a boy, whose voice has not yet taken on the bass tones of manhood, but is still of a pure soprano quality. He substituted for a young lady operator one day, and in the course of his duties was seen to smile very broadly. His nearest neighbor, a young lady, seeking to find the cause of his amusement, was told that a bank clerk up town was trying to flirt with him. No sooner said than the lady connected this particular bank clerk with all the operators in the room, and all of them took in the conversation, including the answers dictated to the boy by his lady friends. The uptown masher exulted in his easy conquest, and appointed a meeting, saying that when the Central office closed he would station himself in a certain doorway, and that the fair damsel might know that he was the proper party by the nosegay he would wear in his buttonhole. At the appointed time about a dozen of the girls proceeded to walk leisurely up street, in groups of three and four. In the stated doorway stood the hero, faultlessly arrayed, with kid gloves and cane, and the æsthetic bouquet. As the first group approached he ran his eye pleasantly over their faces, in search of some token of recognition. But they passed him by, laughing in their sleeves. The same treatment was given by the next group, who could scarcely restrain their laughter at the excitement of the elegant young man. As the last group approached his excitement got the better of him, and he stepped lightly forward, bowing and smirking, and said in his most captivating way, "Which one is it? which one is it?" The girls mastered the situation sufficiently to repress the faintest shadow of a smile, and coldly stared at him without a word and passed on. When that young man attempts to flirt again, he will be likely to choose some other than a telephone operator.—Boston Globe.

ONE of the funniest, most aggravating typographical errors on record has just produced a hurricane, accompanied by thunder and lightning, in the office of the Lynchburg Virginian. Its editor, on glancing over a powerful leader at the breakfast table on Thursday morning last, was astonished to find that he was made to say that the farmers would forget their "pantry and nursery" in the excitement of politics. The manuscript read "poverty and misery."

IN illustration of Lady Florence Dixie's oddities, a London correspondent of the Philadelphia Telegraph relates the following:—"Right opposite 'The Fishery,' where Sir Beaumont Dixie resides, is the country residence of Lord Sandys, and the lawn of the latter stretches clear down to the water's edge. Some time ago Lord Sandys gave a dinner party, and Florence Dixie was one of the invited guests. Before the dinner Lord Sandys, with one of his friends (through whom the story comes to me), was enjoying a breath of fresh air on the lawn in the gloaming, when a sound of splashing drew their attention toward the river. In another moment a dripping figure emerged from the water. The naiad turned out to be Lady Florence, who had swum across from 'The Fishery' in a bathing gown, and sent her maid around the bridge with her clothes."

freely applied during the following winter, but swelling continued to enlarge, until it reached the size of a large apple.

In the spring of 1861 I applied to Dr. Symmes, of Meaford (now dead), who blistered and punctured it but pronounced it beyond cure. But upon a deep incision being made over half a pint of genuine pus was discharged. Immediately it healed, and began slowly to grow again, and in the spring of 1863 I had it operated on by Dr. Chas. E. Barnhardt of Owen Sound, after which, as the inflammation was set in, I went to the hospital at Toronto, and was about a month under the care of that eminent surgeon, Dr. Aikens. He treated the swelling by free incisions, and by setons, which were continued for six months, with no real benefit. In December of that year I was again under the care of Drs. Barnhardt and Allen Cameron for three months. It continued emptying and filling until March of 1864, when, it being closed over, I attended the Grammar School at Kincardine, but in June had it operated on by Drs. Moore and Martyn, then practising in Hamilton. I had it opened [illegible] several times, and had it filled with tincture of iodine for the purpose of destroying the sac. I began teaching in school section No., Kincardine, in Feb., 1865. In about three weeks it violently attacked me again, and I was advised to go to Dr. P. R. Shover, of Stratford, who, with Dr. Hyde, opened the abscess and applied iodine freely into the inner walls of the cavity, which destroyed the rotundity of the sac, but produced no other benefit. In June, 1867, it inflamed again most violently, and I was under the care of Dr. S. Secord, of Kincardine, for six months. From that time until 1873 it was an open, unsightly sore. I removed to Virgil, township of Niagara, and taught during 1872, trying to labor, though under intense suffering. At Niagara I was so completely worn down that I consulted Dr. Wilson, who said he could only prescribe a nourishing and stimulating diet in order to meet the drain on the system. This kept me about, but offered no permanent benefit. In 1873 I moved to Port Credit Public School, but after eighteen months resigned my charge, afterwards assuming charge of Glen Williams school, County Halton. In May, 1874, suffering terribly, I again went to Toronto to the same Dr. Aikens that had treated me in the general hospital in 1863. That summer and fall I was greatly afflicted, and suffered fearfully during the winter of 1874-5. The next summer I went to Dr. Mullin, of Brampton, under great suffering. He treated me very skillfully and kindly, advising me precisely as did Dr. Wilson of Niagara. January, 1876, I became head master of the Bath school.

During a nine months' stay at Warkworth Dr. McRae and Dr. Goldsmith, of that village, both operated on me, and also did Dr. Mitchell, while I was attending college at London. After my ordination on the 18th of June, 1878, I volunteered to take the Bishop's poorest mission, and through painful trial laboured on under the providence of God. I now have three fairly good churches. Starting from nothing, I have made for myself a pleasant and desirable home. When I came to Wiarton in July 1878, I was again violently attacked and confined to bed for over two weeks under the care of Dr. Wigle, who incised the abscess, and, by care I did my work until the following spring, when his services were again necessary, and again in December, 1879, I went to London and consulted Dr. Morehouse, and afterwards Dr. Woodruff. Although I had to work very hard that winter, I was under constant suffering. The abscess assumed a cancerous appearance. I assisted the Bishop in March of 1879 at St. James' church, Westminster, at which time my neck was completely covered with a white cloth. I am rejoiced to say that I no longer need to cover my neck to hide my affliction, and fear no recurrence of the same. Dr. Wigle, of Wiarton operated on me in May, 1880, and again in December of that year. I then went to London, and on my return I was again attacked more violently than ever. I was almost on the verge of despair, having been treated by the best medical skill the country contained as the many eminent names previously mentioned will show. When I had exhausted the skilful resources of the regular profession, I then resorted to nearly all the patent medicines that promised to cure scrofulous and blood diseases, but without any benefit whatever. When in an almost helpless condition I tried Burdock Blood Bitters, I took it for about four months, and in that length of time used several bottles internally, and having faith in its common-sense-like rational promises, and believing that if it was a good alterative blood-purifying medicine that would act upon the glandular system when taken internally, why, I reasoned, would it not, by the power of absorption, excite the glandular system and the secretions to a healthy action by direct application outwardly, through the medium of the skin, and thus exert a double curative influence. I applied it freely externally with the most astonishing and gratifying results. Believing I had made a singular and valuable discovery, I persevered in my efforts, and they to my great joy were crowned with success, and for the first time for years I was able to dispense with surgical aid, which I firmly believe, I shall never require again for the same disease. More than two years have elapsed since I have had any attack of the disease, and I feel as well and safe now as if it had never affected me, which after more than twenty-three years of terrible suffering seems almost like a miracle to relate.

I have tried Burdock Blood Bitters for one of my children, who was afflicted with an obstinate humour of the blood, and whose face was covered with sores, now perfectly smooth and clean; also my servant, treated for swelled neck, and many other cases in our parish to whom we have given and recommended the remedy. Such is our faith in its virtues that I seldom [illegible] small bottle for any suffering friend. Knowing that it cured me, and believing that it saved my life, I most earnestly and heartily recommend it to suffering humanity, and would urge all who may be similarly afflicted to give it a trial.

Mr. Austin Jay, Copenhagen, Ont., [illegible] he was so afflicted with Liver complaint [illegible] he was about to give up work. The druggist at Aylmer induced him to try Zopesa with such good results that after using two bottles he was able to resume work as usual. Mr. Edward Atkinson, illustrating the advantages of machinery, says that it would require 16,000,000 persons, using the spinning-wheel and hand-loom of less than a century ago, to make the cotton cloth now worn by our people, which is now manufactured by 160,000.

The report for the past year of the Society for the Preservation of the Irish language states that at the commencement of the present century probably not more than 400 persons could read and write Irish, whereas this society alone had disposed of over 62,000 elementary Irish books. These publications continue to be in great demand. The number of persons in Ireland who speak the old language is nearly 950,000, as against nearly 818,000 in 1871, although the population has during that period diminished, in round numbers, by 252,000 persons. This, as pointed out, is nearly equal to the number of Welsh people speaking Welsh. "Not only," it is observed, "has Leinster increased its number of Irish speaking inhabitants, but Dublin has made a considerable advance in this respect, partly fulfilling the old Irish prophecy."

Vegetine

I Am Now Using it Freely in My Practice.

'FACTS TELL THE STORY.'

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan 7th, 1880.

Mr. H. R. Stevens:

Heretofore I have been strongly opposed to all proprietary medicines, but, as there is an exception to most rules, I feel that my prejudice against patent medicines has had a rearful shock in the case of your VEGETINE and has been compelled to give way before the strong-er evidence of facts. About two years ago I was induced to give a fair trial of your Vegetine as a detergent in some Strumous (Scrofulous) cases of hereditary transmission, attended with swelling of the lymphatic glands and joints, carious ulcerations of bones, and constitutional syphilitic taint, &c., and in justice, I feel I should be derelict to duty did I not testify to the great value of your Vegetine. Without exception, I have found it an admirable adjunct in the removal of the above constitutional disturbances. I am now using it freely in my practice. I am aware that I am rendering myself amendable to the charge of unprofessional conduct in thus encouraging the rules of medical ethics, in fostering so-called Quack Medicine. This is simply Base. Facts tell the story, and I again assert that Vegetine is a valuable adjunct to our Materia Medica. If this testimony to its value will secure one more bottle, I shall feel that I have done some poor sufferer a Samaritan benefit.

Yours very truly,
JARVIS R. WILCOX, M.D.

THE CANCER MEDICINE.

Newmarket, Ont., March 21, 1880.

Mr. H. R. Stevens—Dear Sir: This is to certify that I have used your Vegetine for Cancer, and can cheerfully say it did more good than the doctor's medicines or any other remedy I used, and I would recommend it to every one troubled with Cancer or Cancerous Humour.

Yours truly, THOS. GILL, Yonge-st.

I hereby certify that I know the above party and know this statement to be true.

In the trial of Kelly this morning the jury were sent back to reconsider their verdict, but, after returning to court a fourth time and reporting that they could not agree, were discharged. Fagan was then placed in the dock and pleaded not guilty. The Court directed Mr. Adams and Mr. Byrne to defend him. Much difficulty was experienced in forming a jury; seventy-five persons called failed to appear, and were fined a hundred pounds each. Carey, the informer, testified that he arranged to stab Mr. Forster after the plots to shoot him failed. He did not attend the meetings of the Assassination Society on Sundays on account of Sabbatarian principles. Even now he wished to remove tyrants. He believed it was no sin to kill Mr. Burke. Two compositors swore they saw Fagan in Phœnix Park on May 6.

Featherstone and O'Herlihy, charged with being implicated in the dynamite conspiracy, have been taken to Liverpool, where they will be tried, together with Deasy, who is in custody on a similar charge.

The offers relative to the emigration from Ireland which Lord Carlingford referred to in the House of Lords on Monday are from Canadian Pacific Railway and land companies interested in opening up the Canadian North-West. Their proposal is to settle 25,000 families, numbering 25,000 persons, on Government lands, under the homestead law, which give each family 160 acres free. The promoters of the scheme would become security for £1,000,000 to be advanced, interest free, by Great Britain, for ten years, to be devoted to loans sufficient to start each family, or they would become security for £5,000,000, with which they would relieve the overcrowded districts of Ireland of 50,000 persons.

CURIOUS FACTS.

A tree was cut a few weeks ago in Hempstead County, Ark., that measured twenty-four feet in circumference. It took six men working constantly half a day to fell it.

The proprietors of the London Pictorial World have had a balloon built for themselves in which experiments in balloon photography are to be made; that is, views of the earth from the sky are to be taken.

At German theatres the play, long as it is, is over at half-past nine. If it be not over at that time no silence could decline to wait for it to conclusion, that being the hour of supper. If ever this hour be the least exceeded, a banging of box doors—sounding like the irregular fire of a band of guerillas—is sure to be heard and in a short time the house is cleared.

The northern nations of Europe were taught by grim experience to dread extremities of cold more than extremities of heat and in Norse mythology we accordingly find not only that Niflheim, where Hel, the Goddess of Death, received the departed, was thought of as a world of cold that lay to the North, but that it was supposed to lay world of heat that lay to the South.

Voltaire's house is now used by the Geneva Bible Society as a repository for Bibles. The Bible Society's house in Earl street, Blackfriars, stands on the site where, in 1378, the council met to forbid Wycliff circulating portions of the Holy Scripture, and where he uttered those memorable words, "The truth shall prevail;" and the Religious Tract Society's premises are built on the spot where Bibles were publicly burnt at Paul's Cross. The Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute stands on the site of no less than six disreputable houses, and the strongholds of Satan have become a stronghold for God.

In the old times, when great lawyers were not so abundant in England as they are now, clients resorted to ingenious expedients to secure their hearty service. Sir John Maynard, who flourished in the latter half of the seventeenth century, once had a client who came to him with a basket of pippins. Suspecting that there was more in this unique retainer than appeared, the lawyer broke open a pippin. It contained a gold piece, and so did every apple in the basket. "These are golden pippins indeed!" exclaimed the learned counsel. On the next day came the man on the other side to retain Sir John, and gave him a roasting pig stuffed with fifty gold pieces. "That's good sauce for a pig!" said the lawyer. But, toothsome as was the dish, he was obliged to decline it, being retained already on the other side.

She Settled Him.

A young woman riding in a street car had endured for ten minutes the fixed gaze of an impertinent dandy, when a simple way of getting the better of him occurred to her. Assuming an expression of horror which gradually relaxed into amusement, she looked steadfastly for a moment at a point on his coat collar just below his ear, and then with a quiet smile turned her eyes away. Never was the complacency of a young fool more completely disturbed. He fidgetted in his seat, went through dreadful contortions, and almost rolled his eyes out of their sockets in the effort to extend his range of vision to the point below his ear; brushed softly, then eagerly, then frantically the suspected spot, and at last, in an agony of apprehension, rushed out of the car and into an adjacent bar-room in search of a mirror.

At a wedding at a village church near Stafford, in England, the officiating clergyman was about to perform the ceremony when, chancing to glance upward, he noticed in the gallery several persons wearing billy-cock-shaped hats. Addressing them, he said: "Gentlemen, remove your hats." There was no response. The request was repeated again and again, and, not being complied with, the clergyman in a great heat ordered the clerk of the church to ascertain the names of the offenders. Before he got there a lady in the congregation rose and informed the minister, amid laughter, that the persons were ladies wearing gentlemen's hats. The ceremony was then proceeded with.

A Prudent Maiden.

Ah! Who is it? It is the maiden whose hand the poor young man has asked in marriage.

What! Did he ask it then, after all? He did.

But did he know better? Oh, yes; he knew much better.

Why, then, did he do it? Because he could not help himself.

How was that? Well, she looked at him.

And did he come to time? Very promptly.

Has she answered the young man yet? Not yet.

Is she thinking about him now? Yes; she is sizing him up.

And she will give him her hand? Probably not.

Because she does not love him? No, but because she fears he would not be a good provider.

Must she marry a good provider? Yes, for she was raised a pet, and cannot take in washing.

Is it a prudent maiden? Most discreet.

But why did she look at the young man if she did not want him? In order to teach him selfcontrol.

Was that not kind in her? Awfully kind

The fires of trial have burned up the rank overgrowth of many a worldly career, the storms of affliction have cleared the air of many a selfish life, and out of the chaos of some awful crisis of personal experience a new heaven and a new earth have been born.

LIVELY TIMES ON THE SUN.

The Great Orb of Our Solar System in a

Four remarkable spots have made their appearance on the sun's disk and are advancing [illegible] each day. Those 9 of storm-cloud, toward the centre of the solar disk. One of these spots is enormous in size, rivaling some of the great spots which were visible at the time of the violent magnetic storms of last year, and the other is of unusual magnitude. They are not far apart, and appear to be drawing closer together. Precursor, although they are near the eastern edge of the sun, and consequently are seen considerably askant, no telescope is needed to show them like a speck of dust upon the shining globe. When they get near the centre they may be expected to make a much more imposing appearance than they do now. Since the diameter of the sun is [illegible] there will be more than 400,000 miles nearer to us than when they first made their appearance at the edge of the disk. The distance, however, although upward of twice as great as the distance of the moon from the earth, is so small compared with 93,000,000 miles which separate the sun and the earth that it will make practically little difference in the appearance of the spots. Their greater size and distinctness when seen near the centre will be owing to the spherical form of the surface upon which they appear. Anybody can get a clear conception of this by taking a ball and drawing a small picture upon one side of it. Only when the ball is so presented to the eye that the picture appears near the centre of the visible hemisphere will it be seen to the greatest advantage.

These spots and some large ones which were seen about the first of last month, and which, if they are not yet in existence, must now be on the side of the sun which is turned away from us, suggests the interesting question whether sun spots reappear at intervals at the same places on the solar globe. The location of the spots now visible closely resembles that of some of the great spots of last year, and it is suspected that several of the spots of 1882 may have reappeared in the same places after having once vanished. Owing to the lack of permanent land marks, it is exceedingly difficult to determine whether there really are places on the sun's surface where spots appear with special frequency. If it can be shown that such places exist, very important changes must be made in the present theories of the constitution of the sun, and we may be brought back to something resembling William Herschel's conception of a sun with a solid nucleus comprising a very large portion of its bulk, and surrounded by a luminous atmosphere, through which holes are made by the eruption of enormous volcanoes or by other forms of eruptive force. There are the weightiest reasons for believing that the sun can not possibly have such a nucleus.

If the present activity of the sun continues for a month longer the astronomers who have gone to the middle of the southern Pacific ocean to observe the total solar eclipse on May 6th will probaby be witnesses of a magnificent spectacle. When great sun spots are most numerous the mysterious envelopes surrounding the sun, which come into view during a total eclipse, appear to the best advantage, present the most imposing and curious forms, and extend to the greatest distances. In case the sun happens to be greatly disturbed about the 6th of May these astronomers may have an opportunity to make most interesting and important additions to our knowledge of the great ruler and centre of the solar system.

The opportunity to study sun spots like those now visible will become less frequent from this time until nine or ten years hence, when another maximum point of solar activity will be reached.

How Perfume is Extracted.

One of the best methods of obtaining perfumes is by the use of grease. The process is called maceration. The best fat employed is marrow, which is melted in a water bath and strained. While it is still warm the flowers are thrown in and left to digest for several hours. They are then taken out and fresh ones are placed in the grease. This is continued for several days. The grease and perfume are then separated by the use of alcohol. Beef marrow is not the only substance used in extracting the odors from the flowers. Inodorous oils are also used, especially refined olive oil, which is more extensively employed in the south of Europe. The process is used for delicate plants, such as jasmine, tuberose and cassia, which will not allow the use of heat, it is on the principle of absorption. A layer of purified lard and such mixture is spread on the glass bottom of a square wooden box, and upon this, freshly gathered flowers are spread every morning as long as the flower is in bloom. The boxes are kept shut, and the grease soon acquires a very strong odor. In saturating oil, instead of glass bottoms to the boxes wire ones are used, the boxes or frames are piled upon each other to keep them close. After the oil-soaked cloths are sufficiently charged with the perfume, they are placed in a press and the oil is squeezed out.—New York Sun.

A Remarkable Case.

The case of the birth of a child occurring in Niagara county N. Y. recently, which has just become public, is said by the physicians who attended the woman to be entirely unparalled in the history of medical practice. Over a year ago a lady named Harrington, residing at Ransomville, received a severe stroke of paralysis, rendering her entire body except the head and one arm completely helpless. To the surprise of her neighbors she lived along however, and the astonishing climax occurred a few days ago, when she gave birth to a healthy child while alone, and being partially paralyzed, felt it, being unable to feel pain. She was found later with the child born, and the physicians were summoned. The afflicted lady lived for several days, but finally expired, it is said, from lack of proper attention at the start. The child is alive and healthy yet. The case has excited great interest among local physicians, as the facts are well authenticated.

House Cleaning.

The season is now at hand which is dreaded by most housekeepers, and to which all ing the quotation, "The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year," as a very mild expression of their sentiments. Under the most favorable circumstances house cleaning makes great demands upon the nervous as well as the muscular system, and it should be the aim of the careful housewife to see that all operations are performed with as little discomfort as possible. More than ordinary attention should be given to the provision of nutritious food at regular intervals. It is not necessary that there shall be such a general overturning of affairs, that those members of the household who do not participate shall feel that dire confusion reigns, and that there is not even one room that does not show traces of the disturbed order of things. Do not attempt too much at once, but, if possible, arrange it so that only one or two rooms are undertaken at a time, and put them in order before beginning another.

The first place to receive attention is the cellar. Throw away everything that is no longer of use. Make your fat—which should have been fried out and melted into cakes—into soap. If your coal-ashes have not been removed weekly, have them carried out. All empty boxes and barrels, and all boards that you do not wish to save, have split into kindling wood. Then sweep the ceilings and walls thoroughly, and sprinkle the floor, if it is stone or cement, before you sweep it. Examine the walls, and if any rat-holes are found fill them with pounded glass, and cement them over. Cellars should be whitewashed every Spring. If plenty of cooking-salt is put into the whitewash it will not rub off, and copperas added to it will repel all vermin. Six or eight pounds of copperas to a half-bushel of quicklime will not be too much.

After the cellar is finished, begin the attic or store-room. Everything should be looked over and cleaned out. Every drawer, trunk, box, bag, and bundle must come forth from its hiding place, and yield its contents to a more vigilant inspection that that of a Custom House officer. All woollen articles must be beaten and exposed to the sun and air before being consigned to summer quarters. Woollen articles that are out of season should be put in bags made of brown paper or newspapers; if made of the latter, the paper should be double for greater strength, and a soft paper should be chosen so it will not tear. The edges can be pasted together, and when the goods are in, the bags must be pasted up tightly. Unless moth-eggs were in the garments, you need have no fear for their safety if you put them away in boxes or drawers, and scatter a little camphor and borax over them. The floor of the storeroom should be washed in hot alum-water, and all corners thoroughly cleaned as a protection against the eggs of moths and other insects.

THE SORROWS OF GENIUS.

Homer was a beggar.

Terence, the dramatist, was a slave.

Plautus, the Roman comic poet, turned a mill.

Lee, the poet, died in the street.

Cervantes died of hunger.

Spencer died in want.

Dryden lived in poverty and distress.

Sir Walter Raleigh died on the scaffold.

Tasso, the Italian poet, was often distressed for five shillings.

Butler lived a life of penury, and died poor.

Bacon lived a life of meanness and distress.

Otway, English dramatist, died prematurely, and through hunger.

Steele, the humorist, lived a life of perfect warfare with bailiffs.

Paul Borghese had fourteen trades, and yet starved with all.

Chatterton, the child of genius and misfortune, destroyed himself at eighteen.

Bentivoglio was refused admittance into a hospital he had himself erected.

Savage died in prison at Bristol, where he was confined for a debt of £40.

The death of Collins was through neglect, first causing mental derangement.

Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" was sold for a trifle to save him from the grip of the law.

Fielding lies in the burying ground of the English factory at Lisbon, without a stone to mark the spot.

Milton sold his copyright of "Paradise Lost" for $75, at three payments, and finished his life in obscurity.

Camœns, the celebrated writer of the "Lusiad," the great Portuguese epic, ended his days, it is said, in an almshouse; and at any rate was supported by a faithful black servant, who begged in the streets of Lisbon for him.

Uncle Jake Solves the Problem.

Uncle Jake Somerindyke made quite an oration a few mornings ago, at the Gabe Case's road house, on the subject of the trotting horse in motion. "Why," said he, "do you know that there are old horsemen that will swear that a trotter is never all off the ground when he is at full speed? I never saw such pigheads. How could a horse make such a stride as he does and not be all clear off the ground at times? There was that horse Dutchman. I saw him trot three miles under saddle in 7:32½ and he did his fastest mile in 2:28. We measured his stride, and it was twenty-three feet. Why, you might knock him in the head and stretch him out, and he wouldn't reach that far." And everybody said, as Uncle Jake finished his toddy, that his last argument had solved the problem of the horse in motion.—Spirit of the Times.

If the figures as given by the Philo-Celtic Society in Ireland are correct, the Irish language is spreading at a rate that threatens London with unreportable speeches calculated to stir the Irish heart. It is said that at the beginning of this century there were only about four hundred persons who could read and write Irish. The figures show that to-day there are 950,000 people in Ireland who speak the Irish tongue. There are now Irish primers and grammars and lexicons.

A ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

How a Woman Retaliated.

[illegible] of Bridget Condron against James Riley and Mollie Gahin Riley, his wife, claimed because of alleged defamation of character, the suit was withdrawn, defendant Mary Riley, filing a retract on of all statements made by her derogatory to plaintiff's character, and defendants paying all costs. The suit was filed Oct. 11, 1882, and in its history, as detailed by Miss Condron [illegible] stings of [illegible] and romance. The story is in substance: Edward Barrett, a young man employed this at Turner & Day's ax-handle factory, had been for some years paying lover-like attention to Miss Condron; they became engaged to marry, and preparations for celebrating the nuptials were well on the way, when a dark cloud of doubt floated across the horizon of the young lover's hitherto boundless faith and broke the sweet dream of trust. This doubt of his lady-love was aroused in her mind by damaging things told by her neighbor, Mrs. Mollie Gahin Riley. The parties all live neighbors on Seventh and Oldham streets. Shortly before the time set for the consummation of their happiness the young lover, maddened by these whispered stories of base infidelity on the part of his sweetheart, went to her and demanded of her a confession or a denial of the slanderous stories. She indignantly denied the stories, and, learning who their author was, denounced them to that party's face. Barrett professed his belief in the truth of the denial, but said he desired the fair name of the girl established beyond the doubt by a verdict of the court ere he could make her his wife. The suit was brought and the result leaves no room to doubt but that the charges were entirely unfounded and should never have been made. Now came a little sequel which showed that Miss Condron is not only above suspicion in her character as a lady, but is true to herself and independent. Since she has succeeded in fully vindicating her good name, Mr. Barrett expresses a perfect willingness, she said, to give her his name, but as he, knowing her all his life and after being a constant visitor of hers for several years, could not believe her in preference to slanderous gossip, she expresses a determination never to accept it. She thought, though, that turn about was fair play, and as he had let her make preparations once to marry, and had failed to come to time, she let him believe firmly that she was going to marry him until the day to which the ceremony had been postponed had nearly arrived, and then notified him that his preparations were for naught. She says she has no ill-feeling for Mr. Barrett, but he was unjust to her, and she would not marry him if he was the last man in the world.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Jew's-harp.

The origin of the Jew's-harp is lost in the long lapse of time, and it has hardly ever attracted sufficient notice as a musical instrument to be worth the inquiries of musical antiquaries. In Germany it is called "Maul Harmonica;" in Denmark, "mund harpe;" in Sweden, "mungiga;" in France, "Guinbarde;" in Italy, "Tromba," and in the Highlands, "Tromp." The Greeks of Smyrna call it in imitation of its sound, "Biambo." In the Netherlands and Tyrol it has for a long time been the delight of the peasants, the laborers, and their families, and at present it seems to be in an exceptional great favor in America, where an Englishman has in Troy established a factory of those vibrating instruments; and so brisk has the business been that another factory has been started recently, where the commonplace Jew's-harp are turned out in hundreds of thousands.

The first noted performance on this simple instrument is mentioned in the memoirs of Mad. de Genlis, in which is described the astonishing power on the Jew's-harp of a poor German soldier named Kock, in the service of Frederick the Great.

However it was reserved for a German herdsman and laborer of the name of Eulenstein to acquire an almost European reputation as a player on the Jew's-harp. After ten years' close application and study, he surmounted a host of difficulties, and attained a perfect mastery over this intractable instrument.

Mr. Eulenstein appeared with greatest success at concerts, first in Paris, in January, 1826, and later on in London, in June, 1826, where he executed with "grace and expression the most charming Italian, French, and German airs to the admiration of amateurs and 'professionals' alike." He used at the concerts to play duets with Mr. Stockhausen on the pedal harp, the latter accompanying him pianissimo, and touching the chords lightly, so that Mr. Eulenstein's part in the duets could be perfectly heard.—From Music and Drama.

The Evolution of Pantaloons.

There were the breeches of the period immediately succeeding the revolution. They were short, reaching only to the knees, mostly made of cloth, buttoning at the sides. The wealthy wore them of velvet, or corduroy, as the fancy seized them, or of doe cloth. The first long pantaloons were mere comfortable bags, and this was principally due to the fact that they were homespun—made by willing but unskillful hands. The first improvement was when they were so altered in construction as to button elsewhere than at the side. Suspenders were not until comparatively recent times, somewhere about 1840, I believe. Distinctive styles in breeches date from the close of the war. Then there came the garments tight at the waist and to the knees, where they bagged enormously, giving the appearance of swelled joints. The pockets were called "top pockets," and could be reached only by pulling the vest up to the chin. Later they were cut high in the waist and medium in the legs. This was a return to first principles. The next trousers to achieve popularity were those miserable "tights." They fitted the nether extremities like eel skins, and suddenly swelled to awful proportions at the bottom. The present styles are elegant, and a decided advance on any that have preceded. The trousers of to-day is as complete an institution as can be wished for. There are well contrived recesses for the watch, the pistol, the whisky flask, keys, knife, comb, handkerchief, pocket-book—in short, everything that the most fastidious man could desire to have about him.—Philadelphia Press.

MARKDALE, MAY 3RD 1883.

INDEPENDENT PAPERS.

Our contemporary south appears on his "hobby horse" when endeavoring to belittle the course of the STANDARD in reference to its political standing. We might here reasonably ask, what has the Advance made of its peculiar course in politics. First on the fence, not knowing on which side to get down, preferring rather to "bide a wee" in order to ascertain on which side the pasture grew the most luxuriant, thereby intimating that he was (as it were) willing to be "anybody's dog for broth." He got down, however, and to all appearance is down yet. In endeavoring to discuss matters political he has clearly shown that he understands no more about them than (figuratively speaking) a cow knows about a fiddle, hence the Reformers have turned from the wonderfull sheet with disgust, while respectable Conservatives look upon it with distaste. Then in order to draw out the sympathy of his supporters he would make it appear that we had created a sentiment of hostility to Flesherton. This is a falsehood of Advance creation. What will be next on his program, time will tell.

EARLY CLOSING.

Our merchants have all signed an agreement to close their shops at 7 o'clock every evening during the summer season. Saturdays excepted, when they will be kept open until 9. We hope customers will bear this in mind and endeavor to have their shopping done early in the day, and thereby assist to carry out the arrangement. The selesmen and attendants need out door exercise as well as other people a' this commendable move will materially assist in that direction.

ANOTHER OLD RESIDENT GONE.

Mr. James Noble died on Tuesday morning at the age of 45 years, after an illness of about thirteen years, during which time he has been unable to engage in the duties of life. His disease was consumption.

Another Stabbing Affray.

ONE, FARREL OF TORONTO THE VICTIM.

THE WOUND NOT LIKELY TO PROVE FATAL.

On Friday evening last an altercation occurred at James Hogan's boarding house in this place, among some of Paddy Burns' men, who are engaged loading wood on the Rail way. There being no cars to load that day a number of the men got drunk in consequence of being idle, but how the row started and who was the cause seems a mystery, however, a wounded man (who was also intoxicated) went to the Station immediately after being stabbed and requested protection from Mr. Cæsar, the agent, which was the first intimation of anything being wrong. Mr. Cæsar at once sent for Dr. Armstrong, who arrived in a few minutes, and on examination found a wound in the windpipe, such as the small blade of a pen-knife would make. The Dr. dressed the wound which he thinks is not dangerous. Mr. Cæsar had Farrel forwarded by next morning's train to Toronto where he was sent to the Hospital. The cause of the row was, no doubt, too much whiskey more than anything else. The perpetrator is not exactly known, but it is generally believed to be Hogan, who has suddenly disappeared. Another of the gang was arrested for disorderly conduct at the station and lodge in No. 1 Police station until morning, when he was liberated.

SPRING ASSIZES.

The Spring Assizes for the county commenced on Tuesday last. Hon. Justice Galt presiding. The criminal business was very light, the only prisoner in gaol awaiting trial being one on a charge of stabbing. There were six jury and eight non-jury cases on the civil docket. Mr. A. Frost conducted the Crown business.

The following gentlemen composed the Grand Jury :—

Neil McColeman, Foreman, George Buskin, Harris Knight, Wm. Vanstone Adam Goodfellow, Wm. C. Brown, Richard Olmstead. Anthony Shute, Wm. Westaway, George Atkey, Jas. H. Adams, Thos. Rogers, Robt. Guy, Richard Heron, Jesse Ketchum, John Weir, Jno. M. Tupper, Samuel Lloyd, Robt. Harkness, John Robertson, R. D. Bigger, Wm. Edwards, Thos. Luton.

The following cases were disposed of :—

LEADER vs NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—This was a case where Mr. Johnston Leader of St. Vincent sold barley in Toronto to a Mr. Davis by sample, and shipped it by Northern Railway. It appeared that the grain on arriving in Toronto was inspected and put into elevator with other grain of same grade, and a car load from the same bin afterwards offered to Mr. Davis, who rejected it, as not being according to sample. Mr. Leader sued the Company for the price of the grain, claiming that they had agreed to deliver his grain to the George Street switch. The Company contended that by the printed condition on the back of the shipping bill they were permitted to inspect grain and put it in elevator, delivering out an equal quantity of the same grade, and that no verbal agreement could alter that contract. The jury found that the agreement was to deliver the car at George Street, and Judge entered verdict for plaintiff, $359. John Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff. H. Ferguson for defendants.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against John Doyle for malicious wounding.

CREASOR vs PEARSON, et al.—Action on promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff by consent, $481. Creasor & Morris for plaintiff. Creasor & Platt for defendant.

QUEEN vs CARLTON.—This case was postponed from last Assizes. The Crown offered no evidence, and the prisoner was discharged.

BARBER vs BARBER.—Referred to Geo. Inglis, Esq.

QUEEN vs JOHN N. SNAKE.—This was the celebrated Snake case, which could not be tried at the last Assizes, because the Indian mysteriously disappeard during the Court. He now says he was drugged and carried away in a buggy, but cannot identify who did it. D. A. Creasor, on behalf of the prisoner, took objection to the indictment on the ground that the declaration before a Commissioner, who was not a "functionary" within the meaning of the Act, and consequently had no right to take a declaration. His Lordship overruled the objection, and the trial proceeded. The facts are already familiar to our readers. The jury acquitted the prisoner.

WEDNESDAY.

DOW vs COULTER.—There appeared to be an old feud between the parties, who live in Proton, and one day the two defendants, young men named Coulter, had a quarrel with young Dow, in which the latter got several teeth knocked out and sustained other injuries. Dow's father brought this action to recover damages. The defendants contended that Dow had struck at one of them with an axe before they molested him, and what they did was in self-defence.—O. S. Times.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR.—Re Observers letter No. 2. He commences by saying that my assertion connecting him with club 13 of Chicago, is false. Now sir, I want you to understand there is a little party connected with this letter writing, the Observer of letter No. 1 is not the writer of letter No. 2, thus the Matter is explained and if Observer in the first place had written over his own signature it would have been unnecessary for me to reply, as your readers would then have fully known what prompted him to write such trashy stuff, attacking a letter written in the interests of the whole farming community, one sentence of which he or they have never been able to confute. Now in conclusion I beg leave to say that so long as he or any other of the party are so ungentlemanly as not to write over their own signature, I shall consider them too ungentlemanly to have any controversy with througg the medium of your valuable paper.

Yours Truly,

Administrator's Notice.

PURSUANT to Section 34, of Chapter 107 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, notice is hereby given that creditors and persons having claims upon the estate of Robert William Cunningham, formerly of the Village of Markdale, in the County of Grey, clerk, who died on or about the 23rd day of March, 1883, are, on or before the

to send by post prepaid, to Messrs. Reeve, Hall & Fullerton, 20 King street, East, Toronto, Solicitors for William Cunningham, administrator of the estate and effects of the said Robert William Cunningham, deceased, their christian and surnames, address and occupations, the full particulars of their claims, and a statement of their accounts, and the nature of their securities (if any) held by them. And notice is also hereby given that after the last mentioned date the said administrator will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased amongst the parties entitled, having regard only to the claims of which the said administrators shall then have had notice, and that he will not be liable for the assets or any part thereof so distributed to any person of which debt or claim he shall not then have had notice.

Dated at Toronto, this 17th April, 1883.

REEVE, HALL & FULLERTON, Solicitors for the said administrator.

Doll & Brown

As Mr. Doll is leaving Markdale to go into the Wholesale Jewellery Business in Toronto, (and not wishing to leave Markdale altogether,) he has entered into partnership with Mr. W. A. BROWN, late of Flesherton, who is a practical watchmaker and jeweller of over 15 years experience, and comes with the best of recommendations from some of the leading watchmakers in the Dominion.

Mr. Brown will carry on the business in Markdale.

All work entrusted to him will be done in a workmanlike manner.

All work will be guaranteed, and all goods sold will be found as represented, or money refunded.

THE RAILWAY.—An immense quantity of wood, poles, etc., is in the yard here awaiting shipment. The passenger traffic is also quite brisk. So much so that the villagers and others interested entertain hopes of having a freight and passenger station erected. Should there be a station opened, a storehouse would almost immediately be put up, as half an acre of ground is already allotted for that purpose.

Mr. Sargent has the material on the ground for, and will shortly commence the erection of a waggon shop. It will be built close beside Mr. Abbey's blacksmith shop.

Mr. Brown has all he can do in his saw mill working night and day, and is turning out good work.

"SMART."—The rumor is current that a number of young fellows visited a certain sugar bush not far from here and very generously helped themselves to what sap they could get, also to appertainances suitable for "taffying off." It is said the proprietor is not at all pleased, but was not "Smart" enough to carry out his threats.

A VISIT.—Our little hamlet was almost taken by storm one evening lately by the visit of a number of young folks from a neighboring village, however, they appeared to enjoy themselves and we found them very entertaining.

Seeding has fairly commenced in this vicinity.

Durham.

The roads round town are remarkably good for the time of year.

The C. Methodists intend making great improvements to their church.

Mr. Thos. Donaghy has taken up his residence here and we believe is going into the Photo business again.

HOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

THE MAN IN POSSESSION.

IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

There are many ups and downs in some lives, fa[illegible] man [illegible] drinks [illegible] by the [illegible] "between the soup and the spoon in their mouth," pursue the even tenor of their path, unruffled by the cares and afflictions which crowd upon, and too often overwhelm the less fortunate. Hard as it is to grapple with and bear the troubles which are inevitable to us in the ordinary course of nature, those we induce by our own indiscretion and folly are still more galling. I am afraid my case must rank among the latter, as you shall presently hear.

I will not inflict upon you my antecedents; sufficient to state that I am the son of a gentleman in good, though not opulent, circumstances. My father gave me an excellent education, and afterwards a fair start in life by articling me to a neighbouring solicitor. I might have done well, for I liked the profession, and was an apt pupil; but, unfortunately—as is the case with too many intellectual young men—I fell into evil company. It is unnecessary to enumerate the steps, from bad to worse, which gradually led to my undoing; eventually, I so far disgraced myself that my indentures were cancelled. Ashamed to meet my father, I went out into the world an outcast, with scarcely a shilling in my pocket. Failing other employment, I was at last compelled—though bitterly repugnant to my feelings—to accept the humble occupation of a common bailiff; and here my narrative begins.

"Meredith," said my chief to me one bright May morning, when I waited upon him for instructions, "I wish you to run down to Briteleigh in the matter of Warley against Wintock, and take possession in the usual manner. You will be more than ordinarily careful, as we have to do with a very subtle customer. Jones has already been down in the neighborhood; but has returned unsuccessful and quite disheartened. I nope, however, you will have better luck. When once within the premises, you had better sleep with one eye open, or not at all, if you can so manage it."

Now, I rather prided myself upon my professional dexterity, and this my employer knew; but it would have been childish to boast before him. I therefore smiled, but said nothing. Some other directions followed, of no importance to my tale; and after packing a few necessaries in a carpet-bag, I started for Briteleigh. It was the dusk of evening when I arrived at my destination; and I forthwith proceeded to reconnoitre the premises in which I was for a time to domicile as the humble representative of the "majesty of the law," and take under my surveillance the goods, chattels, &c., of Arthur Wintock, Esq., until either the just claims of Warley Warley, Esq., of Warley Hall should be fully and duly satisfied, together with all legal expenses incurred; or the said goods, chattels, &c., should be publicly brought to the hammer.

On my arrival at the village of Briteleigh, I went at once to have a sight of the house intrusted to me. Briteleigh Hall was a large, gloomy, old-fashioned building of the preceding century, and stood at some distance from the high-road, and in the centre of a park of considerable extent. The original edifice seemed to have been added to at different periods; for the superstructure rose in a motley succession of triangular gabled ends from the outhouses to the principal roof, which, surrounded by a parapet, and crowned with enormous stacks of tall chimney-pots, capped the whole. It struck me at the first glance, that however strongly bolted and barred below, it would be easy for any burglar to scale the height and effect an entrance by one of the numerous garret casements which fronted the parapet, unless the same were strongly secured. However, as I had no thought of entering the house by this way myself, and as it was too late to hope to effect an entrance at all that evening, I returned to the village, and walked into the Three Nags, a comfortable road-side inn, about a hundred yards from the park gates. I entered the snug bar parlor and seated myself. It was occupied only by the landlord and two other persons, tradesmen of the village. The three were quietly sipping their glasses and having a friendly chat.

"Fine evening, sir," said mine host, as, noticing that I was a stranger, he saluted me respectfully. "What will you please to take?"

"Oh, a little rum-and-water, if you please.—Can I have a bed here to-night, landlord?"

"By all means, sir!—second-floor back.—Going to stay long?"

"Hum! That depends upon circumstances. At anyrate, I may require it for three or four nights at least."

I felt disposed to secure a night-lodging for a short time; for in our line we are by no means sure when or how we shall be able to obtain access to the premises of which we are to take temporary "possession." Besides, my inn expenses would be refunded; a few extra shillings were therefore of no consequence.

My entrance and the bustle of the landlord had interrupted the talk for a while; but after a few commonplace remarks, such as usually pass between strangers, I settled down quietly to my rum-and-water, and the conversation was resumed.

"They do say he used her most cruelly, poor young lady," said the stouter of the tradesmen, who sat nearest the fireplace, and who appeared to be indignant about some point which had been mooted.

"Cruelly! I should think he did," replied the other. "Ah! it was a sad affair for her when her poor papa died. How he could leave her in the guardianship of such an old curmudgeon beats my understanding."

"Well," replied the other; "he didn't show the black-feather so much while the old man was alive; and they say he was greatly disappointed that his brother did not leave him a good share of the property. It appears he bequeathed nearly all to Miss Maria, his only daughter, allowing, however, a handsome sum per annum to her guardian, to meet the expenses of bringing her up. It is said that the latter tried to force her into a marriage with her cousin, his son George, as unprincipled as himself, and as reckless a spendthrift and gambler as ever handled the dice."

"Ah! well, I suppose that was before I came into the village then, neighbour. You know I only left north last Christmas twelvemonth.—But where is the young lady now?

"That's a question neither I nor anyone [illegible] All we know is, that she was at the Hall. The Squire gave out about twelvemonth after her father's death, that she had gone to Paris [illegible]; but [illegible] ever saw her go, or has ever seen her since. There are never any letters in a female hand received at the Hall, either from France or elsewhere—at least so asserts Simmons the grocer, who keeps the post-office."

"But, the servants—do they never speak of her? Surely they must know."

"He keeps none that are allowed to enter the house, except a big bully of an Italian fellow, whom he brought from abroad—for he was formerly [illegible] and had only returned to England a year or two before his brother's decease—and a cross-grained old woman, who is as impenetrable as adamant, for no one can ever get anything out of her. Neither the gardener, nor the old man who jobs about the premises and looks after the horses, is allowed to intrude. A great part of the house is shut up as closely as if the whole were uninhabited. However, it is supposed to be full of real good furniture, for old Mr. Wintock lived in great style, and none has ever been known to be disposed of."

Hitherto, I had taken but little interest in the conversation; for I was busily employed in ruminating upon my plans for the morrow. Though they had spoken of the Hall, it had not fixed my attention. But when the name of Wintock was mentioned, it roused me at once, and I immediately asked: "Are you speaking of Mr. Wintock—up the way?" pointing with my thumb in the direction of his mansion.

"The very same, sir," replied the stout man, glad to have another interested auditor. "Ah!" he continued, "there's something exceedingly mysterious about the disappearance of that young lady. Some even go so far as to hint foul-play. I, for one, don't quite believe that. But certain it is, you wouldn't catch one of the village people crossing the park after dark."

"Indeed! Why not?"

"Why, sir, you see I don't take any heed of such superstitious nonsense myself; but it is whispered among the poorer folk that a white face is sometimes seen at the windows at unearthly hours, and that fearful shrieks have occasionally been heard at midnight. You know what a country village is, and how easily a place obtains the repute of being haunted. Once upon a time, some of our fellows would steal up there after dark to catch a rabbit or two, for there is a warren on the far side of the house; but I'd venture a five-pound note that not one of them would be hardy enough to try now for all the rabbits in the county. There are reports, too, that old Wintock, or he and his son together, have outrun the constable."

"Oh! Is it true, think you?"

"I believe it to be so. They do say that the life Mr. George and his father led has involved both very deeply in liabilities which neither can meet. Drinking, horse-racing, gambling, and, if people are to be credited, swindling, are to be numbered among their accomplishments. The last dodge was a clever, though a rascally one."

"Hum! What might that be?"

"Well, it seems that old Wintock had run matters so close that he was daily threatened by one of his tradespeople with an execution. As he owed largely, he bethought himself that if this was once suffered to take effect, the rest of his creditors would be after him immediately. To save matters, he goes to a Mr. Warley of Warley Hall, in Downshire, of whom he had some knowledge, represents that he is staying in his neighborhood for a short time, and that, in consequences of expenses which young Wintock has incurred at college, he has occasion for a few hundreds; and so induced the old gentleman to advance him the money on a bill of three months at good interest. When the time expired, the bill was dishonored—not a rap to meet it, at least at the banker's."

"Then young Wintock was not at college?"

"Not he. It was all a scheme to rid them of present difficulties. But I suppose old Warley is down upon them at last rather sharp."

All this I knew before, but was not aware that it was also known at Briteleigh. The old proverb says, "Ill news travels apace." It is astonishing how rapidly the misfortunes or crimes of even the most wary get noised abroad, in spite of the most strenuous efforts to keep them concealed. I did not, however, enlighten my friend as to my foreknowledge, though I could not help thinking that he partly guessed the import of my visit to the village. But I did not deem it expedient to satisfy his evident curiosity, lest in some way it might embarrass my movements. I accordinly took an early opportunity of changing the subject; and after spending a very comfortable evening in social chat, retired to rest.

I rose early next morning, and sauntered carelessly into the part, making a circuit, to examine the house more thoroughly. If possible, it appeared more sombre and uninviting by daylight than on the previous evening. Not that I attached much importance to the tale of my informant about its being haunted; but its heavy closed windows and its general dilapidated look gave it altogether a chilling appearance, which jarred dismally with the fresh spring scenery around. I cautiously neared the house and made a careful reconnaissance. Apparently, no one was stirring. The front-door I found was fastened. I went quietly round to the yard at the back and tried the latch of the kitchen door. It was fastened also.

"Hullo, guv'ner, what do 'ee want?"

I fairly started, and looked up, for I had thought myself unperceived. I could for the moment see no one.

"Wants to rob the house, do 'ee?" the voice continued. "Wait till I calls the measter to 'ee. Thieves, thieves!"

At the same moment the barking of a large dog broke forth within the house. I grasped my heavy walking-stick more tightly; it had a loaded handle. I did not feel altogether comfortable. The voice was that of the gardener. He came into the yard through a small gateway which I had not observed, and which led into the garden. He held a long sharp three-pronged fork in his hand. I saw at a glance that move the first was defeated. Supposing the inmates to be ignorant of my arrival, my plan had been to cower quietly by the door until opened for egress, which I had calculated would be early in the morning, by one of the domestics—either for water, as there was a pump in the yard, or for some other purpose—and then slip in with a dash. Once in, I did not despair of holding my ground, for I had on me a couple of very pretty "persuaders," in case of attempted violence—a pair of pocket pistols.

"There!" I said quietly; "stop that confounded noise. You know better than that. Is Mr. Wintock in?"

The man grinned. "Can't 'xactly say. Dunno. Which on 'em?"

"The elder Mr. Wintock. I want to see him on particular business."

"Do 'ee:"

"Here; come this way a minute," I whispered, at the same time holding up a sovereign between my finger and thumb and stepping under cover of the eaves of an outhouse. "Now, don't you think you can get me speech with Mr. Wintock this morning for this little bit of yellow stuff? You don't pick up sovereigns every day, I daresay."

I had hastily determined to secure the fellow as an ally if possible, and felt that a bribe was the only means of doing so.

He scratched his head, grinned, and looked wistfully at the coin. "Oi dares to say I could—out of doors;" and he stretched out his hand for it.

"Not so fast, my man. You must earn it first. It must be inside. You are not such a flat but that you guess my business here. Let me only put one foot within the doorway, and it is yours."

The gardener gave me a peculiar look, and burst into a loud haw-haw! as he turned away. "No use, measter! T'other chap tried that little game."

I saw my scheme was fustrated, and that there was no help for it. Nevertheless, I hung about the premises for some time, but to no purpose. I went away for a while, and returned again as stealthily as I could. I watched the house for days, and from every available corner that I could use as a hiding-place. The inmates were too much upon their guard. It appeared there was a pump in the scullery as well as in the yard, and plenty of coal in the cellars. The place seemed victualled for a siege. Not a soul ever passed or repassed the door, at least with my cognisance. What orders were issued, were given to Hodge from an upper window, inaccessible by me. At last I determined to give up watching, and try if I could not accomplish my purpose in some other way. I withdrew, foiled, but not defeated.

Thus matters remained for some time, until I began to think I should fare no better than my predecessor, and to grow dispirited; when a lucky accident turned up, which aided me not a little.

One afternoon, disgusted with my ill success, I had taken a walk round the park, and had nearly reached the side remotest from the Hall, when I was startled by hearing sounds of altercation and loud screams for help. I did not hesitate an instant; but in two minutes had scaled the park palings and leaped into the lonely by-road which bounded them on that side. It was well that I did so; for I was just in time to render efficient aid to an elderly female vainly attempting to hold her own against two villainous-looking tramps. The old dame was a carrier from Briteleigh to a neighboring town, whither she went three times a week with her cart and blind pony, to fetch and carry for the villagers, packages and parcels of all descriptions, from a lady's dress to half a pound of tea. The rascals attempted to help themselves to some of the numerous provisions in the vehicle; and being resisted by her, were just on the point of using violence when I rushed unperceived to the rescue, and caused the fellows to beat a hasty retreat.

The dame was profuse in her thanks for my timely assistance, and earnest in her way to make me some recompense. The poor old creature had been terribly alarmed, and shook like an aspen. In assisting her to repack her things, and in trying to reassure her, I very naturally inquired where she was going.

"Deed, an' I be goin' on to the Hall."

The mention of the Hall arrested my attention, and an idea immediately occurred to me. This time, however, I determined to experimentalise, without taking my ally into my confidence.

"Going to the Hall, mother, are you?" I said carelessly. "Ah! I suppose you take parcels there very often, of course?"

"Why, yes, I do, and I don't, now. I go every fortnight for the linen. The family don't wash at home; they send it all to Mrs. Biggs at the village. Them clothes-baskets you see there," she added, nodding to them, "are for the Wintocks; I'm goin' to leave 'em as I go along."

"Well, dame," I said, "I am only out for a stroll. Perhaps those scamps may be lurking about somewhere, to give you another turn as soon as I am fairly out of sight. Suppose I ride a little way with you for protection. What say you?"

The dame willingly assented; and I mounted the cart beside her. It was pretty closely packed with sundry parcels, besides the baskets in question, and well secured behind with a coverlet, tied down to the hinder part of the cart. The blind pony started at a shambling trot. Mrs. Stokes and I got into conversation.

"How do you contrive to get these great baskets out of the cart and into the house?"

"Oh, that's easily done. I untie the cloth behind; and Martha—that's the old woman at the Hall—or else the Italian servant, helps me in with 'em."

And so we jogged on, chatting, round the exterior of the park, until within a few dozen yards of its gates.

"Dame!" I said suddenly, "I did you a good turn a little while back; now I want you to do one for me in return."

Mrs. Stokes was taken at a disadvantage, and looked at me with a perplexed expression upon her countenance. She clearly did not know what to make of my observation.

"I see that your cart is well filled behind," I continued, "so as to screen any one in front from observation, while you are unloading the baskets, if he crouches in this spare place by the seat. Now, I have a fancy just to ride up close to the Hall, so as to get a peep at it unperceived, and which I can easily do through this small hole in the side of the cart. I have heard a great deal of talk about the old place during the short time I have been in this part of the country, and feel a little curious; but, for a certain reason of my own, I don't wish to be seen by the inmates."

"Mercy me! man!" ejaculated the old lady, with a pull at the reins which brought the blind pony to a sudden stand, almost flinging him upon his haunches, "what can you want such a thing as that for? I hope you mean no harm. Surely your face is top honest for a [illegible]"

"Burglar," said I, finishing the sentence for her. "Now, that's very complimentary indeed, after the assistance I gave you just now. I never heard of a thief interfering to prevent a robbery." I spoke as if offended, and could see the poor old creature's feelings were hurt.

"Na, na! I didn't mean that. But it seems such an odd thing like."

"Dame! I suppose they pay you pretty regularly up there?"

"Humph! Wish I could say they did. Owe me a matter of a dozen shillings. Always behind. Promise to pay. Gev a little by dribs and drabs. It's hard lines, though, for an old body like me."

"Ah, now! let me do as I say, and here's a sovereign for you; that will clear the debt and leave you a little balance besides."

The old lady looked at me hard in the face, and then at the coin. "I understand," she said; "a friend of the family—wants to see without being seen, before making yourself known. Just come from abroad, perhaps, eh? No! young man; put up your money. One good turn deserves another. It shall never be said that old Sally Stokes was too greedy to return a favor without being paid for it, so you may just do as you please."

"Thank 'ee, mother. I knew you'd oblige me. If ever I have the chance, I'll repay you with interest; but I shall insist upon your accepting this at least," at the same time slipping a crown into her palm. "Now, don't speak to me, or take any more notice of me than if I was a young sucking-pig for the Squire's table." So saying, I crouched down in the coveted corner, and disposed a few of the parcels so as to effectually screen me from observation. In a few seconds more we had entered the park Jog, jog, up the long avenue, through the wicket gate, and up to the back-door. The dame alighted, rang the bell, and commenced unfastening the coverlet behind. An upper window was opened. "Oh, it's only Mrs. Stokes with the linen," said a female voice. "Wait till I chain up the dog;" and the window was immediately closed again.

I began to feel nervous for the success of my plan. Soon the door was opened; and with a passing observation, the female servant of Mr. Wintock commenced assisting Mrs. Stokes with the first and largest basket of linen. I waited till I saw them enter the house and turn up a long passage; then, hastily alighting from the cart, I slipped in softly after them.

"Are you goin' along this way? What's yeur name, anyhow?" Officer Baggs asked suddenly.

"Why my name's Miss Central; don't you know me? I have charge of the main telephone office."

"Oh, do you?" Officer Baggs asked, and then fell in a deep reverie. He soon took to biting his lips and crimson spread over his face. At the same time he looked askance at the pretty girl.

"Look here," said he presently; "I didn't know that they had girls in that office."

"But they do—in all the offices."

Officer Jim Bagg's confusion visibly increased. "Did you chance to be in that office," he asked, "the other day when a burst of profound swearing mingled with the wail of a strong man's anguish floated over the wires?"

"Well, now," said the lovely girl, "it happens so frequently; really you must be more particular. Perhaps I was there."

"I'm sorry," said Jim Baggs earnestly, "but on one of them frequent occasions I was the depraved monster at the off end of the wire. I tackled the hellocination you have charge of one day in the stationer's, an' I made a modest request to be switched into Johnson's restaurant. The restaurant set up a hello-ing, an' I requested 'em to do up a beefsteak thick an' rare with Loynaise pertaties, coffee, (milk separate) and Injin cakes. The reply came, 'I am the pastor of the Baptis' Church, and there mus' be some mistake.' I got the eatin' house a helloing once more, an' I started in again on my little bill of fare. I had got far enough to describe the shade of brown I'd like to put on both sides of the pancakes when my astonished ear caught the remark, 'Central, shut off that case of famine, will yer, an' let me hear from my friend Biles?' The people in the stationer's set up a laugh at me as I began a third time with the outlines of the supper I wished to have ready when I should get down to the restaurant. I got to where the milk came separate from the coffee, when I was advised that I had left that much of the order in a law office. Well, Miss, I landed that bill of fare first in one corner of the town an' then—an' then—an' finally you or somebody else said wouldn't I please settle on who and what I wanted, and not be interrupting the whole business of the city.' Then for a moment, Miss, my reason fled, and if you'll remember I asked you if you wouldn't kindly tell the eating house to plug up their machine, and I'd drop around an' tell 'em what I wanted, and ended, as you remember, Miss, by asking you it you wouldn't oblige me by going to Florida with your Central office and be hanged to you, or words to that effect."

"Oh, yes," said the beautiful woman, "I do remember that. Oh, you needn't apologize; that was nothing to what I catch every day; positively nothing. Here's my corner; good-day."

Didn't Understand.

"What makes the men go out between acts?" asked a pretty country girl at the theatre.

"Oh, they want fresh air, that is all."

"But I can't understand it."

"Understand what?"

"Why, I don't see what they want to come back wiping the fresh air off of their mouths for. Cincinnati fresh air must be very thick and heavy."

She was left in ignorance.—The Drummer.

At the dissolution of the monastery Westminster Abbey was valued at £3,000 a year. It was made a deanery in 1539 and a bishopric in 1540. Elizabeth displaced the abbot, who had been restored by Mary, and made the abbey a collegiate church of a dean, and twelve prebendaries, which it still remains.

Queen Elizabeth's method of keeping up an efficient civil service was by ordering the Chancellors of Oxford and Cambridge "to bring her a just, true, impartial list of all the eminent and promising students; to set down punctually their names, their college, their standings, the faculties wherein they did excel or were likely to. Thereupon her Majesty was exactly obeyed, and the use she made of it was that if she had an embassador to send abroad then she would nominate such a man of such a college to be his chaplain, and another to be his secretary. When she had any places to dispose of, or for persons of an academic education, she would herself consign such persons as she judged up to the business." Sir William Boswell had papers in which these names were listed and marked in the Queen's own hand.

In addition to this interesting discovery, the fossil remains of a huge reptile were found under the same stratum of light sandstone. The reptile is over thirty feet in length, is partly exposed, the remainder being firmly imbedded in the earthy matter. Mr. Lawson has two of the creature's teeth.

How She Kept Him at Home.

Here is a good story the other day about a notable ex-member of Congress from Pennsylvania, who has been married twice, and for his second wife a lively young widow is extremely fond of social gayeties. Some time ago she made an engagement to attend a young naval officer to one of the fashionable balls, and told her husband she expected an escort. He appeared to be pleased and said that he would accompany her. This was more than she had bargained for, and she resorted to various expedients to induce him to stay at home. The more persuasive she gave, the more he was determined to go. Things were getting desperate when a bright idea struck her. She took the old gentleman's false teeth and hid them, and when the evening came he was still without the necessary adjuncts to mastication. He fumed and raved, and raved and wondered, but it was no use, he couldn't find them, and finally was obliged to remain at home, while his wife tripped gaily to her carriage, and spent a most delightful evening.—Correspondence Boston Traveller.

Sash and Door Factory

From American Agriculturist.

May is a very busy month on the farm, and every hour of labour should be so planned as to tell most effectually. There is danger of haste, and of doing the work in an imperfect manner. The great error of leaving undone the things that should now be done, arises from want of a plan of operations. "As we sow, so shall we reap," and this is the month of sowing and planting. Do everything in a thorough manner, and keep abreast with the demands of the season. Push the work, and do not let the work push the farmer.

Corn Planting.—Over a large part of the country this is the month for planting our leading grain crop. Many make the mistake of putting the corn into the ground before it is ready. Corn is a semi-tropical plant, and the grain should not be planted until the soil is warm and mellow. Corn-planting time is when settled weather has come. There is no better guide than that used by the Indians, who put in their maize when the leaves of the oak are beginning to unfold. Sometimes a watch on the apple orchard, and plant when the blossoms appear. If the kernels are put into a cold soil, they either remain dormant or rot, and nothing is gained, while, should the germinating grain be overtaken by a cold spell, the field has to be re-planted. The corn plant has only a short season for its growth, and requires the best provisions for reaching maturity before the frosts of autumn come. The corn ground should be well supplied with manure in an available form for the rapidly growing plant. This manure needs to be near the surface, and thoroughly mixed through the soil, that the many fine roots may find it readily. Those who have practised putting a quantity of some quick acting compost or fertilizer in each hill, know the importance of having food for the corn plant close at hand. Much depends upon the quality of the seed, and therefore only the best kernels of the superior quality should be used. It will pay to get seed that has been grown especially for that purpose, even though it cost much more than the common grain taken from the crib. To keep crows from pulling the young corn, the grain may be rolled in tar, and afterwards in plaster. The tar can be most easily applied by mixing it in hot water, and stirring in the corn. Among the best of scare-crows are those which make some sort of motion and produce a noise. A small windmill, with "clapper," and pieces of bright tin suspended by strings, constitutes a good "scare." It is not best to use a gun unless fired without shot or ball. Crows do not deserve death, as they are the friends of the farmer for most of the year. They live largely upon cut worms and other insects, and many times, when pulling a young corn plant they are seeking the marauder that lies hidden at its base.

Meadows and Pastures.—The frosts of winter heave the soil and it is well to pass a roller over the meadows and pastures, to firm the surface and make it smooth for the mowing machine. All stones loosened by the frosts should be removed; large ones, if not needed for building purposes, may be sunk out of reach of the plow. Meadows may be much injured by live stock running over them in early spring, when the ground is wet. Any grazing done at this time is at the expense of the hay crop. It is far better to keep the farm animals in the stables and yards until the pasture is able to furnish a full ration, or nearly so.

Live Stock Notes.

Horses.—With hard work, the farm horses should have the best of care. There is danger of over-feeding, especially with corn, thus producing irritation of the skin and restlessness. Good cut hay, wet with bran or meal mixed, is a fine ration twice a day. The brush should be freely used, that the sweat and dirt collected one day may not remain on during the next. An occasional sponge bath is helpful in keeping the horses in good trim. Look well to the feet, that no disease may come to these much exposed parts. Flies will soon come, and some protection from these pests should be made. A thin sheet, fitting the back, with strings to go under the neck and tail, is inexpensive and effective.

Cattle.—The change from dry fodder to succulent pasture food is a critical one, and all animals need more than ordinary care at this time. Young stock are especially subject to disease from over-feeding on green grass, causing black leg, black quarter, and other dangerous troubles. It is best to make the change gradual, by turning the calves out to grass for only a part of each day. Incoming cows need to have their feed reduced before calving, to prevent garget. They should be kept from exposure to cold rains, and in a quiet place. A brush, well used, will go far towards giving the cattle smooth skins and a healthful condition.

Sheep.—There is money in early lambs, if they are pushed forward rapidly for the market. A small flock in fine flesh, sold early, often brings more profit than a large one of late and poorly-fed lambs. Ewes, from which lambs have been taken, sometimes need the milk removed from their udders. Dry ewes, if not to be kept, may be fattened rapidly and marketed. All sheep should be carefully tagged before being turned out to grass. Much disease in the lambs is caused by filth from the mother's wool; therefore clip the wool from about the udder. From now until warm weather of early summer is a specially trying period for sheep. Parturition, the care of ewes and lambs, tagging, washing, shearing, etc., etc., require and should receive the owner's attention and watchfulness. Do not turn out to pasture too early. Permit the grass to secure a sufficient growth to become nutritious. The temptation to dispose of surplus hay and grain about this time is great. It, however, is poor economy to deprive sheep of dry food, when they can get but a bare sustenance from the pasture. Let the change be gradual, turning them out an hour or two at a time, until there is no danger of too great a looseness of the bowels. A little flax seed or oil meal may be advantageously fed at this time. Do not be tempted to too early washing and shearing of sheep. Wait until the weather is warm and settled, and after the washing takes place, turn the sheep either upon a dry, clean pasture, or into a straw-littered yard. The change from a thick fleece to none at all should not be made while cold spring winds are blowing, and rain-storms are frequent. If, after shearing, there comes a cool, wet day, shelter the shorn sheep at once. After May has passed, sheep will require but little care.

Swine.—Pigs need a run at grass. An orchard is a fine place for swine; it affords good grazing for the pigs, while the trees are benefited by the destruction of insect pests. Young pigs may be fed milk at an early age with profit. Much depends upon the breed, as some animals possess more natural gentleness.

Poultry.—Hens should already have given good return in eggs for the attention paid them, and now the young chicks are coming forward. Pullets hatched this month should begin to lay early in the fall, and with a warm house, will continue giving eggs through the winter. Young chicks need to be kept clean and in a dry place. Move the coops frequently. If the ground be damp, they will catch many ills that might be destroyed.

A Bad Little Boy.

Mr. Willard S. Morse's 2-year-old son Salmi has inherited much of his father's ingenuity, as a record of his exploits amply testifies. During his parents' absence from the house for a brief half-hour, the young man put in about two days of solid mischief which for ingenuity and costliness has never been surpassed. He had a new fourteen-dollar rocking horse which had been presented him in recognition of his self-abnegation in giving up the infantile habit of a nursing bottle at night. Somehow or other, he became impressed with the idea that the horse wasn't constructed on correct principles, so he got hold of the family hammer and knocked off the horse's head, and to complete the dumb creature's ruin he cut off the tail and pulled ont one of its front legs. Then he put the head where the tail ought to be, the tail where the leg ought to be, and the leg where the head ought to be, and then, in a spirit of triumph, he mounted the dismantled animal which, perhaps in a spirit of revenge, immediately tumbled him off against the stove, skinning his forehead and raising a ghastly bump on his classic nose. This, however, did not discourage the precocious child. He next tried his hand at the art of decoration. Procuring his father's blacking box and brush, he proceeded to draw weird pictures on the lace curtains and pillow shams and his mother's sealskin cloak. He also painted a wonderful picture of a house on the bosom of one of his father's shirts, which had been carelessly left on the bed. His active mind soon wearied of this, and he began devising new methods of amusement. With the poker he scratched strange hieroglyphics on the piano case and wound up this divertisement by poking the poker through the plate glass mirror at another little boy he innocently imagined was on the other side. About this time his mother made her appearance and that she arrived inopportunely is gathered from the fact that little Salmi's voice was for some moments thereafter lifted in wailings that betokened physical if not mental anguish. His father sat up till 12 o'clock last night figuring on the probable cost of his son's little racket.—Denver Tribune.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

Cleanliness of body was ever esteemed to proceed from a due reverence to God.

Take Your Choice.

You can be weak, nervous, debilitated, and despondent, disqualified for work of head or hand, or you can enjoy a fair share of health and peace of mind. Burdock Blood Bitters will alleviate your misery and do you a world of good if you will persevere in their use for a few weeks. (21)

Truth is the highest thing that man may keep.

Why Be Downcast?

True, you may be in a miserable condition—you may be weak, pallid, and nervous. You cannot sleep at night, nor enjoy your waking hours; yet, why lose heart? Get a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters. It will restore you to health and peace of mind. (23)

He who lives to no purpose lives to a bad purpose.

Josh Billings says: Next to a clear conscience for solid comfort comes an old shoe. Undoubtedly Josh must be a sufferer from corns, and has not yet heard of the great and only sure cure, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. This great remedy never fails to remove the worst corns—soft or hard—in a few days. No discomfort, no sore spots, but prompt and certain cure. Beware of flesh eating and sore producing substitutes. Use Putnam's only. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, prop's.

It is better for a young man to blush than to turn pale.

CATARRH—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

The art of being able to make a good use of moderate ability wins esteem, and often confers more reputation than real merit.

The Rev. Dr. Howard, Chaplain to the mother of George III., rector of St. George's, Southwark, was always in arrears with his tradesmen, and was often perplexed to keep them in good temper. He one day took for his text, "Have patience, and I will pay you all." After dilating for some time on the virtues of patience, he said, "And now I come to the second part of my discourse, which is, 'And I will pay you all,' but that I shall defer to a future opportunity."

PIMPLES AND HUMORS ON THE FACE.—In this condition of the skin, the VEGETINE is the great remedy, as it acts directly upon the cause. It cleanses and purifies the blood, thereby causing humours of all kinds to disappear.

I like men who are temperate and moderate in everything. An excessive zeal for that which is good, though it may not be offensive to me, at all events raises my wonder, and leaves me in a difficulty how I shou'd call it.

My Mother.

Has been using your Burdock Blood Bitters as a liver remedy, and finds them very efficacious. Chas. L. Ainsworth, 41 Vance Block, Indianapolis, Ind. (20)

Confidence is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom.

Mr. William Lees, of Burford, writes. I was in terrible pain last winter and spring with rheumatism and could not rest day or night. I tried St Jacobs Oil, and strong lotions until blistered, and treated with a good physician, but could not get any lasting relief until I used Rheumatic Repellant. It has driven all pain and rheumatism out of my system. I wish to recommend it to all troubled with rheumatism.

Childhood shows the man, as morning shows the day.

A Fine Hit.

When the proprietors of Burdock Blood Bitters put this renowned medicine on the market, they hit it exactly. They hit dyspepsia, indigestion, and the liver and kidney complaints a hard blow, from which they will never recover. (19)

Conscience warns us as a friend before it punishes us as a judge.

An Excellent Report.

Hon. Jos. G. Goodridge, of Brooklyn, N Y., writes: "I cannot express myself in sufficiently praiseworthy terms of Burdock Blood Bitters which I have used for the past two years with great benefit." (22)

You may depend on it he is a good man whose intimate friends are all good.

First Rate Evidence.

"Often unable to attend business, being subject to serious disorder of the kidneys. After a long siege of sickness, tried Burdock Blood Bitters and was relieved by hal a bottle." Mr. B. Turner, of Rochester, N. Y., takes the pains to write. (24)

FORTUNES FOR FARMERS AND MECHANICS.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgement in taking care of the health of your self and family. If you are Bilious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

Said he, "let us be one," and she was won.

WOMAN'S TRUE FRIEND.

A friend in need is a friend in deed. This none can deny, especially when assistance is rendered when one is sorely afflicted with diseases, more particularly those complaints and weakness so common to our female population. Every woman should know that Electric Bitters are Woman's true friend, and will positively restore her to health, even when all other remedies fail. A single trial always proves our assertion. They are pleasant to the taste, and only cost fifty cents a bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

A drunkard's nose is not painted in water colors.

NEVER GIVE UP.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co., Markdale.

A kicking cow never lets drive until just as the pail is full, and seldom misses the mark. It is just so with some men's blunders.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION.

Why do so many people we see around us, seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cts., we will sell them Shiloh's Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup, and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a Cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10cts, 50 cts. and $1.00. If your Lungs are sore, Chest, or Back, Lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

"Pay as you go" is a good motto, but if some men should go as they pay, they would never get anywhere.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY.

A marvellous cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria, Canker mouth, and Head Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious nasal Injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50c. Sold by Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

What difference is there between a donkey and a postage stamp? the one you lick with a stick, while the other you stick with a lick.

McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and affection of the Liver, and from the immense sale of it without advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the market, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents and one dollar. 127-40.

Don't judge of a man's character by the umbrella he carries, It may not be his.

CALVERT'S CARBOLIC CERATE.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of DR. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Address,

Kimberly.

The fall wheat crop has been badly injured nearly half of it will be plowed and sowed with other grain.

Owing to late rains very slow progress has been made in seeding here.

Sugar making here has been rather an unprofitable business this spring.

Our Landlord, James Thurston, gave a Maple Sugar Party, it was a grand success.

Robert Hawkins of Eugenia, has purchased the McGee farm adjoining Kimberley.

James Fawcett, of Kimberley, has had an addition to his family, a son.

The farmers here are beginning to learn something of the profit of fruit growing, and are adding to their already respectable sized orchards. Fruit growing here is but in its infancy, and promises soon to be one of the leading industries of the valley.

Priceville.

Only a small quantity of grain has been sown yet, owing to the unfavorable weather.

Mr McGowan is preparing to build a first class dam.

Our citizens were somewhat startled on Saturday morning, by hearing that Hugh Scott was found dead lying on his kitchen floor near the stove. The deceased had gained considerable notoriety by being almost continually engaged in law suits, and appearing several times before the high courts on criminal charges. It seems that on Friday last, he sold a cow, and in the evening was observed somewhat the worse of liquor, and was found by the neighbors the next morning as above stated. An inquest was held on saturday night, on Sunday a post mortem examination. The jury will meet and give a report some day this week.

ESPECIALLY FOR LADIES

What Can She Do?—An American Girl—English Professional Beauties—Chit Chat.

What Shall the Girl Do?

In the "Girl's Gossip," in London Truth, the writer says: Mr. Treble died suddenly, and everyone was supprised to find that there was little or no provision for the widow and daughter. There is only the insurance on his life, which brings in about £100 a year. Mabel is trying very hard to get something to do, but that is very difficult for a girl who has had only a "fashionable" education, which seems to consist in putting a high polish on the exterior and neglecting everything that could possibly turn out to be in the least degree useful. We have had her staying with us for a week, and have tried several ways of getting her some remunerative occupation. She even thought of going on the stage, but a gentleman whom we consulted, and who has the whole of that matter at his finger-ends, advised her very earnestly against adopting the stage as a profession. He said he would rather see a sister of his behind the counter in one of the smallest sweet-stuff shops in the Strand than let her become an actress. In fact, he said that if a girl was a respectable gentle-woman, it was almost impossible for her to get on in that profession, and that the rewards fall as a rule, to those who are least particular about their conduct. Of course, there are brilliant exceptions, but poor Mabel could scarcely hope to be one of them. Besides, he told her that actresses have to associate with persons who are quite beneath the social level of one's own maid, to dress in the same room with them, and listen to their conversation, which is occasionally enlivened by phrases of a very forcible sort. So we gave up the idea. Then we tried the places where they sell ladies' work on commission, Anything more hopeless you can hardly conceive. Piles of useless frippery are exposed for sale under or behind glass cases to keep the dust away. The "dust of ages," I had nearly written, for things remained on hand so long that they become almost fossilized. "Is there a ready sale for any kind of work," we asked, in despair—"for the beautiful embroidery now so lavishly used on dresses or the kind applied upon plush?" "Oh no! These things come all ready worked from France, Germany, and Belgium. Foreign embroiderers and embroideresses are reaping a golden harvest from the fashion." "But do not ladies who want to furnish their stalls at bazaars come here and purchase their poorer sisters' work?" "O no," we were told. "Everything at bazaars now is got from regular shops. It saves an immensity of trouble because the shopkeeper takes back the surplus stock." "But how do they make it pay?" "Simply by charging a fancy price for everything sold at the bazaar, and giving to the charity the difference between that and the shopkeeper's charge." You see? There was nothing to be done in that direction. Nobody will have the poor girl as a daily governess, because she is not certificated. She would become a telegraph clerk, only that she would have to stand about eight hours a day, and she is not strong enough to do that.

An American Girl.

Rose Macbride Jones was, says the Brooklyn Eagle somewhat remarkable in many ways. She was gifted with a subtle imagination, a quickness of magnanimity, which led her into the danger of becoming too much given to fastidiousness. She often surveyed with complacence the inmost depths of her own soul, and it seemed to her that her mind evolved ideas more quickly than other minds. This could not be called egotism. It was only the result of her associations. Her brain was full of unproportioned ideas, and, having no one about her to say "This is correct," or "This is absurd," she managed to twist delusions and the actual into hard knots. Coming into the midst of old-world society, this young, deceitory-flame like spirit found much to amuse it, and in turn became the object of amuse, ment to those about it. There was something about the large, well-ordered, oak-paneled rooms of her uncle's house in St. James' street which struck her as being unlike the interiors of the residences of her own country. The soft moving servants and general air of quiet and restfulness impressed her as a new sensation and threw about her a charm of strangeness. She would sit for hours in the dark cool corners of the large rooms and watch with intense interest all that was going on about her. She grew to love her uncle, and he, first a little bored, soon came to appreciate her society. Like most American women, Rose had been brought up to give vent to her opinions. Her ideas, though often crude, were always respected. She was fond of asking questions. In this she was almost not unlike other American women. Her uncle was full of patience, and answered Rose to the best of his ability. This bright, quick-speaking American girl pleased the old gentleman. They would sit together in his study for whole afternoons talking over the British constitution, the state of India, the justic, or the injustice of the invasion of the Crimea, the character of the aristocracy, and other subjects which are always sure to interest the American girl.

"I like your type of an English gentleman," said Rose. "Lord Fitz Hugh is so simple and outspoken."

"But I doubt if he is contented," said her uncle. "The laws of society here in England are so peculiar."

"You mean that he has no scope for his ambition," said Rose, with girlish simplicity. "He can only go into the army, the church, or politics."

"Something worse than that," said her uncle. "I know him to be a radical. A man with land and a title should never be a radical, at least, not in England."

"I think you are about right," said Rose. "I know I look at these things from the point of an American, but I think you are about right."

"Why don't you marry him?" asked her uncle.

"Yes, it would be a good thing for him," said Rose. "I have thought it over quite seriously."

"Then you could take him to America, where his title would not conflict with his politics."

"I will do it," said Rose.

English Professional Beauties.

The English professional beauties seem to bring bad luck to their husbands, no matter how many shekels they may stow away in their own purses. Everyone knows of the story of poor Mr. Langtry and his ruined fortunes, and now comes another claimant for our sympathies. Mr. Mackintosh, the husband of one of the P. B.'s, was anxiously expected here, and many people, for many reasons, would have rejoiced in and been comforted by his return. When lo! the swift Cunarder arrives without him or his personally conducted troupe of young noblemen, who, it seems, are deserted at the moment of sailing, having learned that their amiable cicerone has many debts left in New York, which would be likely to interfere with their pleasure programme. But if Mr. Mackintosh's creditors in New York must give up the hope of seeing him, they had the satisfaction of hearing from him. He has sent them his schedule in bankruptcy.

CHIT-CHAT.

It is generally understood that "No 1" was tempted to do what he did by Eve-nts.

Woman is regarded by some men as a conundrum. They will rack their brains over her for a while and then give her up.

T. H. Blythe, of San Francisco, the man with many wives, must have had a cup filled with Blythefull wives instead of bitterness.

"Have you seen 'Olivette'" asked a lady of her friend who had visited the opera the night previous. "No, my friend," replied the other, "not all-of-it; I saw only one act.

The dude in Kentucky: "Do you see that young man going along there?" "Yes, what of it?" "He's got girl on the brain." "Ah; judging from his appearance the girl must have had a soft sit.

"The Campbellites are coming" was the signalling when President Garfield took his seat, but when Arthur succeded him the cry was changed to "The women are coming," and they are there."

"Are your domestic relations agreeable?" was the question put to an unhappy-looking specimen of humanity. "Oh, my domestic relations are all right," was the reply; "it is my wife's relations that are causing the trouble."

"Ma," said Miss Purvenu, "Jennie Jones has been presented at court in London. "That's nothing," replied ma; "why I was in the court two whole weeks when my sister was getting her divorce. We are just as good as the Joneses."

It is said that Boston mothers are endeavoring to imitate some Chinese women by reducing the size of their daughters' feet to a reasonable circumference. What a blessing it will be to the boys who have occasion to dance with them, as it were.

In a museum in New York a woman spends most of her time in an aquarium under water. When it is considered that she can not, of course, talk while submerged, her sad lot in life will draw a tear of sympathy from every female eye in America.

"What play is that?" asked a sweetheart of her lover, as she saw the flaming handbills of "Iolanthe" on the walls. "Oh," he replied, indifferently, "'Iolanthe,' of course." "You do?" inquisitively inquired his sweetheart. "Well, what do you owe him for?"

"The top of the morning to ye, Misthress Jones," said Patrick. "Was that young lady I saw wid ye yisterday yer sister?" "Yes, Patrick," replied Mrs. Jones, "that was my sister." Patrick; "And was she married?" I don't know?" Mrs. Jones; "She has been married, but she is a widow now." Patrick: "A widdy is it? and is her hoosband did?"

The child of the widow sits upon the knees of her mother's suitor, when the following conversation takes place: Child—take out your teeth, Mr. Brown, and let me see them. Mr. Brown—I can't do that. Nature has fixed them too tightly there altogether. Child—You are not as smart as my mother. She takes hers out every night before she goes to bed. The result of this interview is that the match is declared off, and that Mr. Brown, like Tony Weller, learns to beware of the widows.

How to Kill Rats.

Marvelously courageous are rats in recognizing devices for their capture. Toasted cheese and rank fish are among the baits commonly employed, since the far penetrating odor of these lures them to the spot where the trap is set; but in places where they are so plentiful that their resort may be counted upon, nothing is so likely to induce them to enter as a bit of fruit or lettuce, of which they are passionately fond. Another very successful dodge for catching them in bulk is to strew the room liberally with some highly seasoned, thirst producing food—salt cheese, for instance, or peppercorns and hempseed, and arrange a bucket of water in such a way, either by means of a tilting board or greased rim, that when they go to drink they may tumble in and be unable to get out again. A friend of mine asserts that no bait is so attractive to them as simple paper (they certainly seem to be very fond of it), and suggests that they would greedily devour blotting paper impregnated with some fluid poison disguised with their favorite oil of anise. How this might be I do not know; but I should doubt it, considering what acute analytical noses these little toxocologists have, but it is worth trying. Deer and such like animals are highly absorbent of paper. I knew a fellow who possessed a pet brocket that could do no wrong, until one day it went into his cabin and ate a number of $5 notes, since which he has looked upon the corvidæ as a very inferior group, and genus cariacus as distinctly immoral. Traps they will rarely enter, they are suspicious of poison, and if they are beguiled into taking it they get away behind bulkheads and into other inaccessible places to die, and so breed a pestilence. Anything with a very strong admixture of arsenic will preserve the bodies from corruption, unless they get wet; but not one rat in a hundred will even sniff at such a compound, and its trial generally results in the poisoning of every domesticated animal on board, and ends by its finding its way into the coffee one morning, or some thing of that sort. Occasionally, however, rats will make a mistake, and it is no uncommon thing to pick them up dead in the holds of ships which carry dried hides, in the preparation of which a great deal of arsenic is used.—All the Year Round.

WHAT DYNAMITE CAN DO.

The Terrible Foe to Human Peace and Happiness—Those Infernal Machines.

A new peril now presents itself against which the legislature has launched an act of parliament, of which the urgency was so distinctly felt that the bill was rushed through both houses in a single night and received the royal assent next day. Fearfully violent and dangerous within a limited sphere and under certain conditions, nitro-glycerine yet fails to compass all the purposes which malice would desire.

It is worth while to look calmly at this terrible foe to our present peace and see what is the acual extent of the mischief it is calculated to inflict. A "Plot to blow up London" has been announced; but London is more difficult to blow up than to burn. A couple of hundred weight of nitro-glycerine is a fearful cargo and would cause tremendous damage. The noise and confusion would strike terror into thousands, and many buildings not actually launched into the air would be thrown into a heap of ruins. A box of gunpowder would be far less terrible in its effects, and yet a large proportion of the energy possessed by the nitro-glycerine would be practically thrown away. That is to say, if all the force appertaining to the nitro-glycerine were presented in the form of gunpowder, much greater ruin would be wrought among surrounding buildings.

Considerable excitement was created in the summer of 1881 by the discovery of sundry "infernal machines" concealed in the cargoes which arrived at Liverpool from America. Each machine was a metallic box fitted with a clock-work arrangement, and containing about two pounds of dynamite. Col. Majendie and Major Ford, in their last annual report under the explosives act of 1875, state that the experiments which they afterward conducted with one of these machines against a masonry structure showed that the machines were not nearly so destructive as was popularly supposed. The experiments conducted by Col. Majendie and his colleague, as well as some of earlier date by the royal engineer committee, were considered to prove that "the effect of small charges of dynamite and similar explosives upon masonry structures is essentially local." The results would necessarily vary according to the relation between the charge employed, the strength of the building attacked, the area presented by the structure, and the position selected for the charge. "But," it was added, "any general, or even partial destruction of a public building, or of a substantial dwelling house could not be accomplished except by the use of very much larger charges of dynamite and similar substance, than could usually be brought to bear without attracting observation, and the effect of a 'single infernal machine,' containing a few pounds of explosive, would be structurally insignificant." In the explosion at the offices of the local government board the local effect was intense, the stone work close at hand being pulverized, while the general structure of the building stood firm

Sir Frederick A. Abel observes that the shattering and splitting effect of dynamite upon rock is much greater than that of gunpowder; in quarrying, the rock is not generally thrown off by them to the same extent as by the less violent agent. Dynamite has sometimes been employed to fissure the rock, and afterwards large quantities of gunpowder have been poured into the crevices, by the explosion of which enormous masses of rock have been removed. In submarine demolitions it has in like manner been found that when iron-built ships have to be destroyed, the lifting effect of large charges of gunpowder is advantageous in clearing the framework and other parts which have been shattered, but not actually removed, by the more violent class of explosives. It is a curious fact that even gunpowder can be made to approximate in its character to the nitro-glycerine compounds, if it be fired by means of a powerful detonating fuse. If this plan be adopted it becomes no longer necessary for the gunpowder to be closely confined, but it shares with the dynamite class the property of displaying great force when placed merely in contact with the material to be destroyed.

It is this quality of force, independent of confinement, which makes nitro-glycerine compounds so available for evil purposes. The clockwork arrangement is also dispensed with by the use of an acid which is set free to leak its way through a few thicknesses of paper, until it reaches a chemical compound which detonates, and starts the explosive in connection with it. Comparing dynamite and gun-cotton with gun-powder, we are told that "in military operations, where great displacing action is required, gunpowder has the undoubted advantage." This is really what the "dynamite party" world desire in carrying out their designs for the destruction of London. But as the conspirators are obliged to act furtively, they have resorted to a fiercer and less cumbrous agent than gunpowder. It the nitro-glycerine seized by the police in Southampton street was intended to form the basis of one explosion, and if it was arranged that similar quantities should be fired in Southwark, and elsewhere, the effect must needs have been tremendous, supposing the fiendish programme to have been successfully carried out. The deafening nature of the explosion would itself constitute a moral effect of a very intense description. The smashing of brickwork and masonry, the crash of falling buildings and the general uproar and confusion would create a scene of the most fearful nature, inevitably accompanied by an extensive sacrifice of human life. Yet even 200 weight of nitro-glycerine, despite its terrible energy, would fail to accomplish all the desolation which writers have generally predicted concerning it.

He Deserved His Reward.

Another hoop-snake has been discovered, but strange to say, the gentleman who saw it did not adhere to the conventional form.

"And you say that the snake did not roll after you," said a man when the hoop-snake man had concluded his recital.

"No, he did not roll after me."

"You didn't jump behind a tree, then, just as the snake struck at you?"

"No, sir."

"And the leaves on the tree did not wither and die within two hours?"

"No."

"My friend, here is a $20 gold piece. A man who can defy temptation as you have done, and stick to the truth, should be rewarded."

MYSTERIOUS.

The Alarming Nature of Unseen Dangers Accounted for—Why Men and Women are Timid.

"I fear no evil that I can see!" exclaimed Napoleon, and his acts proved the truth of his philosophy. He could face danger in every form; but the sunken road of Waterloo was an unseen foe, greater than the armies around him. The same principle seems true with most people. We fear the unseen; we dread the unknown; we shrink from that which possesses the power to harm, that which is liable to break at any moment. A volcano is picturesque; but men do not build their homes upon its sides.

In the midst of so much mystery and so many unseen dangers, we naturally feel a sense of awe. We wonder if some terrible calamity may not be just beneath the surface of what is apparently bright and serene. We wonder if some small portion of the human machinery should get out of order what the result would be; and we fear disaster from powers we cannot comprehend. It is natural we should do so! It is reasonable we should wonder what would become of us if the delicate mechanism of the brain should get broken, It is natural we should ask what the result would be if the million tissues of the lungs, liver or kidneys should become disordered. A slight excess; a careless attention to the details of health apparently does no harm, but it none the less undermines the life. It is a draft upon vitality which must be honored in the future. The trite saying that such acts "drive nails in one's coffin" is as true as it is old.

But our own neglect is by no means all the unseen injuries that come to the human system. There are a thousand evil influences all around us at war with our lives. They are inhaled into our lungs and poison the blood; they are absorbed through the skin and foster disease; they are devoured with the food and corrode the most important organs of the body; they are transmitted by contact with vegetables and minerals as well as mankind. Good health is a thing to be acquired; it will not come of its own accord. The man or woman who possesses the power to counteract all these evil influences and tendencies has obtained a secret of untold value. The constant strain and exertions above referred to, gradually weaken some of the most important organs of the body and invite them to welcome the coming of broken health. The lungs, heart, liver and kidneys can very easily become weakened; and how? By these very abuses and strains that are constantly brought to bear upon them. It is necessary to guard these organs and preserve their proper tone at all times.

A prominent gentleman residing at the east felt unusually tired one day, but supposing it to be caused by over-exertion he gave it little attention. The next day he was not so languid, but his head pained him. This he attributed to indigestion and took no further notice of it. Matters went along this way for several weeks, the headaches and languor increasing, accompanied occasionally by certain dull pains in various parts of the body. He was not wholly insensible of these troubles; but being closely occupied, he heedlessly overlooked them. There finally came an intense pain in the small of the back; his ankles became swollen to twice their natural size, most violent nausea took possession of him, and life seemed one intense pain. A physician was called, who pronounced it Bright's disease of the kidneys, which he was able to relieve, but could not cure.

Now, had any one warned this gentleman that the symptoms that had troubled him so long arose from the kidneys, he would have attended to them at once; but he did not know it; and many men and women today, in every part of America, are suffering, substantially, as did this gentleman, and from the same cause; and it is high time they should know what it means. It means present discomfort, future unhappiness, and premature death, unless attended to promptly and treated rightly. The only discovery which has ever been made in the scientific or medical worlds that is a certain remedy for all such troubles, is Warner's Safe Cure. Made from a tropical leaf whose properties, like Peruvian bark, are known and invaluable, it acts at once and naturally upon the organs which produce these distressing troubles, carrying health to the entire system and banishing pain.

While the most serious evils which can afflict man or womankind are those which arise from disordered kidneys, they are diseases which can be controlled if taken in time. The trouble is, that they are "unseen evils," and the primary danger arises from the fact that the symptoms they manifest are not recognized, but are attributable to some minor disorder, which, by being considered slight, is permitted to fasten itself upon the system. That one half of physical disorders arise from imperfect kidneys is a new but settled truth; and that these disorders might be prevented by using Warner's Safe Cure is equally true. Thousands of people, including prominent physicians, scientists and divines, who have known of its wonderful powers, indorse and recommend it. It acts upon both liver and kidneys in a direct and certain manner, and invariably relieves and strengthens both. It puts them in a healthy condition, when, otherwise, they would become inflamed. It gives a pleasing tonic to the entire system, and harmonizes all the parts. Druggists throughout the world sell it; and the opportunity for thus obtaining its benefits are brought near to every one. It will solve the mystery of good health, and keep back the day on which comes "the great mystery."

Thousands upon Thousands

Of dollars have been spent in advertising the celebrated Burdock Blood Bitters, but this fact accounts only in part for its enormous sale. Its merit has made it what it is—the best blood medicine ever devised by man. (13)

A Penny Theatre.

Passing through the folds of a remnant of old sailcloth I find myself in the corner of a large loft—partly covering a row of stables—stables unmistakably, from the occasional clamps of tired horses and the fragrant odor which proceeds therefrom—a little below the level of the foot-lights, and on the far side of the stage. There are no reserved seats whatever. From the raised platform to the outer walls are a number of rough planks ranged longitudinally, rising one above another as in an ordinary gallery. In the topmost corner on the right hand is a small inclosure with a counter, devoted to the sale of "oranges, apples, and ginger-beer." The arrangements behind the curtain are primitive and simple; there are four tolerably well painted scenes slung upon rollers, comprising an exterior, an interior, a wood, and a street. The brick-work at the back of the stage is colored to represent a landscape. Wings there are none; but the proscenium—3 feet wide on each side—being fixed parallel with the seats, offers some slight protection to the actors in their entrances and exits. The musical element was sparsely represented; one instrument only—a violin—constituted the entire orchestra. Gas, of course, was unavailable, and candles were too insignificant; the authorities, therefore, resorted to a fearful compound of grease and oil, the fumes of which were suffocating. Five pans, in shape like large garden saucers, were filled with this precious liquid and placed at intervals along the edge of the platform to do duty as "floats." Sometimes the business of the drama required a night effect; this was managed by means of a long slip of deal fastened to the stage by hinges, but lying flat thereon, until the appearance of the blood-stained spectre or the pallid ghost called for darkness, when, by the aid of a cord attached to each end, it was raised, and the necessary result followed. It should be mentioned that there are three "houses" or performances nightly, each of which lasts about an hour. The reader is supposed to be present at the first of these, say at 7 o'clock. By this time the audience has increased in number to at least 300, and the noise they make is deafening. "Stop it, old catgut!" "Pull up the rag!" "Now, then, look alive!" &c. Before the curtain rises, however, it may be as well to mention a little peculiarity attaching to the dramas enacted here. To-night we are to have "The Highland Cateran;" to-morrow, perhaps, "The Outlaw," and the night following "The Freebooter." Thus with variations—harping on the same old string—we at last arrive at "Rob Roy," so that in reality the "change every evening" is a delusion and a snare.—Chambers' Journal.

Strange Coincidences.

In the small town of Zeitz, in Prussian Saxony, lived two women, Frau Schmidt and Frau Feustel, occupying adjoining rooms in the same house. In February, 1881, each was made on the same day the mother of triplets, all boys. This was a decidedly curious coincidence in births. The Rev. Mr. Busch, of Winona, Minn., whose five children were all born on Sunday, has been the subject of some newspaper paragraphs, but his case is less noteworthy than that of a resident of Middletown, Conn., three of whose four children have the same birthday—Nov. 16. A less remarkable coincidence is noted in the case of Mrs. William Minning, of Mount Auburn, O., who celebrated on one day the anniversary of her birth, of her wedding, and of the birth of a grandchild. Why should accident have ordained that the same company of minstrels should have visited Washington on the day that President Garfield was inaugurated, on the day that his remains were borne in state to the capitol, and on the day that the oration was pronounced upon him by Mr. Blaine?

An odd coincidence was reported not long ago in these columns. In 1862 a fire destroyed the city of Kingston, Jamaica. On the day of the fire Aaron de Cordova was born. Aaron de Cordova's grandfather was the first man on the island who erected a building. After the fire, three months ago, in the same place, the present Aaron de Cordova was the first man who erected a building. It was a curious fate which ordained that the son of the Austrian Baron Carl von Hofer, and Andreas Hofer's great-grandson, should perish by a bullet discharged during a rifle-match, being the fifth member of this distinguished family slain by such a wound. Three years ago one Lewis Hiltz, of Independence, Mo., killed Joseph Melody, but was acquitted on the ground of insanity. Two years later, on the same day and at the same hour, he received a fatal sunstroke on the same spot where he committed the crime. Coincidences relative to deaths are numerous if not always very noteworthy. On the 19th of April, 1882, Edward Goss was buried at Troy, in this state, from the same house at which, in 1870, the same clergyman had buried his brother James. Both brothers died on the same day of the month at the same hour.—New York World.

Alba and the Alligator.

There was quite an excitement near Frascati recently owing to the killing of a large alligator by Capt. P. F. Alba. The alligator having been discovered some distance from the shore, Capt. Alba, who happened to be passing, procured a pickaxe and waded into the water toward the monster, which was 10 feet long. Not being able to get within striking distance, the Captain procured a gun and fired several shots at the saurian, pounding him in several places. The Captain by this time was over his waist in the water. Suddenly he saw the alligator disappear, and soon after felt something under his feet as he was taking a step forward. It didn't take the Captain long to find out that this was the head of the "gator," who seemed bent on hostilities. Cap. Alba pushed the head away with the muzzle of his gun, and awaited developments. The alligator soon came to the surface again, but showed no disposition to make off. On the contrary he opened wide his jaw immediately in front of the Captain. Taking advantage of this gap, Alda put the gun in the allegator's mouth and shot him in the throat, killing him instantly. The monster was then hauled on shore. Cap. Alba was of course very wet, but a kind-hearted young lady lent him her buggy blanket which enabled him to reach town comfortably.—From the Mobile (Ala) Register.

Five hundred agricultural and other labourers, mechanics and domestic servants recently left Liverpool for Canada under the suspices of the Samaritan Society.

Spoopendyke's Printing Press.

Spoopendyke came home one night bringing a small bundle in his arms.

"It's a printing press on which I expect to do all my own printing hereafter," he said.

"Oh, but isn't that lovely!" fluttered Mrs. Spoopenkyke, dropping the stork and rushing to her husband's side; "and can't we do the loveliest things with it! It is the kind the Herald and Sun and all those papers are printed with."

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Spoopendyke," growled her husband, "you've hit it exactly. This is the very kind. I got Mr. Bennett to kindly try it on, so as to get it the same size as the Herald is printed on."

"And you will print papers with yours like Mr. Bennett and the other editors?" continued Mrs. Spoopendyke timely.

"Oh, but won't I though!" yelled her husband. "It needed a dodgasted female idiot to think of that; you've struck the proper plan. Think you can print 50x60 show-bills with a 3x4 press? Well, I tell ye that ye can't. Can you get it into your measly head that this is a card press, and can only print a card three inches by four inches?"

"Oh, it's a card press, is it?" ventured Mrs. Spoopendyke; "then we can print those beautiful Christmas cards on it, can't we?"

"Now you've got it," yelled her husband; "that's the idea. It prints in thirty-five different colors at one impression, and any design, from the picture of an old crank with a sealskin overcoat, loafing round somebody's chimney with a game bag full of jumping-jacks, to the New Year, 1883, represented by a hump-backed baby dressed in a broad grin, with a napkin tied around his waist, driving out the old year, dressed as an old tramp with a mowing machine and a gallon jug of whiskey under his arm. That's the idea exactly. Think you can print chromos and lithographs on it, don't you! Well, you can't. You can only print one color, and that is black. Think you grasp it now?"

"Well," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, "I suppose you can print visiting cards on it?"

"Yes, Mrs. Spoopendyke, I can," said her husband, in a softer tone, and he grew in a much better humor as he proceeded to show his wife the press and exhibit his dexterity in the use of the type and the press.

At last he got his worthy helpmate's name set up in type, and proceeded to put the chase on the press with a grand flourish. But in an evil hour he had forgotten to key it up, and at a touch the whole business went to pi, and at the next fell in a confused mass all over the carpet.

"Why what makes it do that?" said Mrs. Spoopendyke, laughing.

"What makes it do that, Mrs. S.?" sneered her husband as he hit his head on a corner of a table in a mad dive after the type. "What d'ye s'pose makes it do it? What makes anything do anything? If I had your talent for asking idiotic questions I'd get a glass of beer and a three-inch paper collar and live out as a prosecuting attorney."

By this time the worthy gentleman had got the name set up and securely fastened, and was printing with great gusto; but he had, unfortunately, set the type up in wrong order, and the first eight perfumed visiting cards came out like the following:

.ekydnepoopS srM

When Mrs. Spoopendyke saw it she set up a little scream. "Oh, isn't that funny, though? What makes it wrong side up?"

"Funny!" howled her husband, with horrid derision, as he grasped the situation. "It's a perfect thunderbolt of fun. It's the most delicious humorous thing of the century. All you need is an advertisement of liver pills on the cover, and a joke about a goat on the first page, to be a comic almanac. With your appreciation of humor, all you need is a broad grin and $3,000 worth of stolen diamonds, to be the leading comedienne of the American boards. Can't you see the measly type's turned wrong? They have only got to be turned round the other way."

After half an hour of diligent labor the types were again in position, securely keyed up, and put on the press.

When the final arrangements were completed Mr. Spoopendyke turned round to wink at the baby, and incautiously left his thumb over the edge of the press. As luck would have it, Mrs. Spoopendyke, in her anxiety to show her husband how well she understood and appreciated the press, brought the lever down, and the press closed on that gentleman's thumb, making him jump four feet high, and utter an exclamation that would have made the second lieutenant of a company of pirates blush. "Dodgast the measly printing press," he shrieked, as he smashed the base burner with it, and then he threw it in the alley. "Haven't ye got any sense scarcely? Why didn't you go on with the entertainment? The measly thing only got as far as the bone. Why don't ye finish the chapter?" and Mr. Spoopendyke danced upstairs, five at a time, with a parting injunction to his wife to hire out as a slaughter-house.

"Well," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, as she picked up the baby, and put a pitcher of water where her husband would be sure to fall over it when he went down stairs in the morning, "if we have so much trouble in printing one word, I wonder how Mr. Bennett gets along with a whole newspaper to print?"—Drake's Traveller's Magazine.

Submarine Cables.

Over 80,000 miles of submarine cable have been laid and are now in successful operation. The capital employed in establishing the cables is estimated by good authority as being $150,000,000. A fleet of nearly thirty ships is kept in service, laying, watching and repairing the various cables, of which nine cross the Atlantic. A writer well versed in the subject says that the type of cable varies little from the first one laid, but the character of the material employed has greatly improved, so that the breaking strain of the homogeneous iron wire has reached 90 tons to the square inch. The methods of laying cables have so greatly improved that last year a cable was laid across the Atlantic in twelve days,—only a little longer time than that required for a quick ocean voyage.

NORTH-WEST NOTES.

Culled from our Prairie Province Exchanges.

The Birtle people are organizing a band, and $300 has been subscribed towards the object.

The Winnipeg Commercial has been enlarged by four pages. This is a satisfactory evidence of prosperity.

Tenders are now being received for the grading of 21 miles of Manitoba North-western Railway from the Beautiful Plains to Minnedosa, to be completed in August.

Farmers in the neighborhood of Manitoba City are preparing for spring seeding. About three times the acreage of wheat sown last year will be put in this season.

The P. W. & N. W. Railway Company are having trouble with their line at the Westbourne marsh. A break has been temporarily repaired, and another is feared soon.

Miss Olive Henderson took a pencil sketch of Edmonton town and fort a few days ago, which is to be inserted in a forthcoming publication of James Campbell & Son, Toronto.

Business at Brandon has been very good, the fine weather has removed all the snow and dried the streets, and dust has been flying. Building is being pushed forward rapidly; structures of all descriptions being put up.

It is stated that a land syndicate, formed under the presidency of Lieutenant-Governor Dewdney, has secured all the Hudson's Bay Company sections along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were obtained at the same time and on the same terms as the celebrated section 26, upon which Regina has been located.

The Winnipeg Consolidated Mining Co., have had a host of callers to see the bricks recently brought from the mines. The effect produced by these bricks was very marked and in consequence many hitherto sceptics have become firm believers in the future of Keewatin.

The Winnipeg Free Press is responsible for the statement that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have purchased the steamboats from the proprietors of the Goodrich Line, of Chicago and Milwaukee, and that during the coming summer these will ply between the terminal points of the Company's lines in Ontario and Prince Arthur's Landing or Duluth.

The directors of the Portage and Westbourne Railway are pushing ahead their work, and are determined to tap the Saskatchewan at the earliest possible date. They have already secured ample terminal and depot grounds at Goschen, in Prince Albert, and Messrs. Brydges and Scarth and other capitalists interested in the enterprise will shortly visit Prince Albert in connection with it. This road will penetrate this country by the way of Birch Hills and the Carrot River country.

The stringing of the wire on the Government telegraph line from Qu'Appelle to Touchwood Hills was successfully accomplished in sixteen days by A. McConnell, of the former place, and three Indians, although the snow on the plains was two feet deep. Poles are being got out for the gap between the hills and Humboldt, and there is a prospect that the through line will be in operation in two or three weeks.

The Lake Winnipeg Mining Company have received intelligence that Supt. Borden, who left the city for their mines on Tuesday last, had succeeded in reaching the ice on the lake in safety. As the ice in the lake a short distance from the shore is perfectly safe, Mr. Bordon and his men have reached the mines, most probably by this time. The latest reports from there are reassuring and a demand has sprung up for this company's stock in consequence, but hitherto none of it has passed into public hands.

The Hay Island Mining Company sent out a gang of men to open a shaft and developments will be henceforth vigorously prosecuted. Work would have been commenced on this Company's property long since had not the snow prevented the possibility of locating the shaft. As the location is in the immediate continuation of the well-known Keewatin, but little time will elapse before the Hay Island will take rank with the best companies in Keewatin.

Bread Making.

If flour be worked up with water it forms a sodden, insipid, indigestible mass; but if heated to the temperature of boiling water the starch granules burst; and it is thereby rendered a little more digestible, although still forming a close, stiff, and not very palatable cake. Such is the character of unleavened bread, and of sea biscuits, a slightly different form of the same thing. To be fit for digestion starch must be dissolved or softened by boiling or baking; hence the reason why raw nuts are so indigestible as compared with the favorite roasted chesnuts, and hence one reason for cooking food, which mankind has been taught by experience, ages before chemistry could give a scientific explanation of the reason why. Cooking is, in fact, a partial digestion; and the same is the case with baking, both being preliminary aids to the changes which take place in the mouth and stomach before the food is in a fit state for the preparation of the blood. Accordingly, we bake our bread; and we bake it in the way we do because a soft, spongy loaf is more readily moistened and acted on by the saliva and the juices of the stomach.

A Monster Fishing Craft.

The three masted schooner Hera, now taking in stores at Washington street wharf, is the largest vessel ever fitted out for a cod fishing voyage in the United States. Her crew consists of twenty-four fishermen, who, with the captain, salters, splitters, dressgang, two cooks and four boys, make up a total of forty men. No more expensive and complete outfit has ever been put on a fishing vessel, and is only justified by the large catch her owners expect her to make. The fishing grounds are in the Okhotsk sea, 4,000 miles distant, and the voyage will last between five and six months. A full cargo will be 250,000 codfish, which will weigh out 400 tons or more.

MARKDALE, MAY 3RD 1883.

DELAY IN THE MAILS.

Our subscribers at Pomona Post Office have been complaining of their papers not coming to that office regularly. We beg to say to them, as well as to all our subscribers, that the STANDARD is mailed every Thursday afternoon, in time for the 4:30 p.m. mail, and we are ignorant as to where the delay is. It is very annoying to subscribers when their paper does not come regular, and we are of opinion that mail clerks, (at least some of them) are either incapable of properly discharging their very important duties or else an extreme carelessness exists on their part.

We very often receive our Owen Sound papers from Toronto, a day later than they should arrive, and occasionally our Toronto mail from Owen Sound. We have mailed matter to Flesherton (six miles) which did not reach that place for four days, and various instances of equal irregularity and delay could be mentioned. We are not given to complaining unless there is a just reason, but we deem it our duty to call the attention of the public to these matters and hope that good results will follow.

LOST HIS BALANCE.

The Flesherton Advance is quite annoyed because it has been unable to excite the ire of the STANDARD, bless your heart, we are only the more amused at the bombast of the Advance in reference to us, and only require to consider where it comes from in order to appreciate his mighty efforts. If the wonderful sheet had a reputation of reliability, we might be led to give serious consideration to the charge it makes last week, but of course it has to say something, and it appears that untruth is the easiest of access, hence the groundless statement.

THE QUEENS BIRTHDAY IN MARKDALE.

The committee of management for the celebration of the Queen's Birthday in this place are determined to make it the most successful ever held here. They have appropriated nearly $200 in cash prizes alone to horse racing, and the course which is on the Agricultural grounds is being fitted up for that purpose. Then, as may be seen by posters, a large amount is given, all in cash, for atheletic games. These together with the Bazaar by the L. A. S. of the Methodist church will draw an immense crowd.

WHAT THE STANDARD WOULD LIKE TO SEE.

A six feet sidewalk to the station.

And a row of maple trees likewise, and the boys not to destroy them.

McFarland's elevator painted and Hill Bros'. finished.

An immense crowd in Markdale on the 24th.

An account of what the village police are doing.

A lockup built,—or the cause for one removed.

Further repairs on the Sidewalk and additional crossings.

Personals.

Mr. P. McArthur left on Thursday for Owen Sound, where he will follow his trade, (carpenter.)

Mr. W. F. Doll stayed in town over Sunday.

Messrs. Thos. & Gilbert Cooledge, left this place with their families, on Tuesday, for Taunton, Ontario Co., where they intend to reside, they have leased their farms in Euphrasia.

Edward Hanlan, was in Markdale, on Monday, looking up a place for he and family to reside a few weeks during the summer, intending to spend the time fishing &c. It wasn't the champion.

Wesley Lyons returned to Sunderland station, Midland Railway, to resume his duties as operator.

Messrs. Jelly, Ex. M. P. P., J Lindsay, Merchant, Mr. Millar, Bank manager, L. Napp, wholesale liquor dealer and J. Hemstreet, butcher, all of Shelburne were in town Monday, they put up at the Mansion House.

Mr. Turner now occupies the large brick residence erected by Lyman Anderson.

Wm. Brown, Esq., has removed to his new and commodious residence on Elizabeth street.

Mr. W. A. Brown, of the firm of Doll & Brown, now occupies appartments in the Reid & McDougall block.

Askins undertaking establishment has been brightened up with paint. Also Montgomery's Bakery, Mr. Lamb's fence, Mr. Cornwall's premises, and the windows of the STANDARD Office have been frosted.

Mr. H. B. Jackman, traveller for J. & J. Taylor's Fire Proof Safe, was in Markdale last week, he made two sales. Taylor's safes have a world renowned reputation, and the price and terms are within the reach of all.

Mr. T. Sproule, late of the Revere, was in town a few days.

W. J. McFarland shipped 82 cars of grain this week.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I am sorry to be under the necessity of again correcting Mr. K. He states in his letter No. 3 that the Observer of letter No. 1, is not the writer of letter No. 2. If T. K's informant has told this he is certainly very unreliable and untruthful, but if he has depended on his own imagination for his information I must say it posesses the same qualities. In either case he should be more careful in future as he will see they have led him astray and are not to be depended upon as reliable.

The facts are that no other person or company of persons dictated or are in any way respondsible for the letters referred to and Observer of 1 and 2 and this makes 3 are one and the same person. Again, he says if I had written my own name your readers would have known what prompted me to write such trashy stuff. What he means by this I know not, nor do I care. What did prompt me to write was to say a little in defence of the institutions established for the benefit of the farmers of this Province, which he denounced, but did not attempt to prove his statements and insinuations respecting them, either by arguments or facts. Whether trashy, as he says, or not, I leave that with the intelligent readers to judge, as they are in a better position to do so fairly and impartially than T. K. is. Again, he states that I have never been able to confute his first letter. Well, sir, I think that I adduced a few, of the many that could be given, facts and arguments in support of the position I took, whether they were sufficient to sustain my position and confute T. K's statements or not, of course I leave others to judge, but in reading this assertion of his I was forcibly reminded of the character whom Solomon describes as being wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason.

In conclusion he says that it is ungentlemanly to not write over my own name. Now sir, this is not true, as the questions discussed are of a public nature and for the general benefit, and I am in no wise personally interested in those institutions, other than in common with every other farmer (one of which I am). I have endeavored to discuss them as public questions on their own merits, and avoided, as far as possible, private personal matters or things foreign to the subjects discussed. True, some deductions were drawn from the facts and arguments adduced and applied a little closely, but nothing but what was fair and allowable in controversy.

There were some other points in T. K's second letter which I intended to touch upon, but as he holds out the flag of surrender, I will desist for the present. When he next goes into public print with letters I would advise him to base his assertions on facts and not on his own opinions. With no ill will towards T. K. and wishing him still better success as a farmer, I bid him "good speed" and remain,

Dear Sir, Yours Truly,
OBSERVER.

SPRING ASSIZES.

(Concluded.)

DOW vs. COULTER.—Particulars of this case have already been given. Verdict against defendant Joseph Coulter for $30, and in favor of defendant George Coulter. J. Masson for plaintiff. D. A. C. easor for defendant.

THURSDAY.

RAYMOND vs. DUFUR.—Action of criminal conversation. The parties reside in Meaford. Verdict for plaintiff $2000. John Creasor, Q. C., and J. S. Wilson for plaintiff. W. D. Pollard for defendant.

The jury brought in true bills against Frank, William, James and Edward Costley and Joseph Coture for obstructing constable in discharge of duty. The cases were postponed till next assizes.

QUEEN vs. JOHN DOYLE.—Prisoner was tried for unlawfully wounding Geo. Beatty at Markdale in October last, the particulars of which were published at the time. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to twelve months in the Central Prison. A. Frost for the Crown. S. J. Lane, Q. C., for the defence.

BUCHNER vs. SUTHERLAND.—Action to recover the value of railroad ties alleged to be sold by plaintiff to a Mr. Baxter, agent of the defendant. The defence contended that Baxter bought from a man named Thompson, to whom plaintiff had sold the ties. The Judge found that there was no sale to Thompson, and gave verdict of $419 for plaintiff. A. Frost for plaintiff. John Creasor, Q.C., for defendant.

HASKILL vs. MILLIGAN.—Action for the recovery of a strip of land claimed by plaintiff, but which defendant contended was part of the road allowance. Judgement reserved. John Creasor, Q.C. for plaintiff. W. P. Pollard for defendant.

FRIDAY.

SCOTT vs. CAVERS.—Action for interpleader to decide who was entitled to certain moneys in the hands of the Sheriff. Verdict for defendant. D. A. Creasor for plaintiff. D. Morrison for defendant.

MASSON vs. STUBBS.—Action for bill of costs. Verdict for plaintiff by consent for $382, subject to award of Thomas Gordon, Esq. S. Masson for plaintiff. Wilson & Evans for defendant.

LEFLER vs. ST. VINCENT.—The plaintiff sued the township of St. Vincent for $10,000 damage for injuries sustained through the falling of a bridge. At the time of the accident plaintiff did not think he was hurt, but some time afterwards began to complain. The township Council contended that he was not suffering from the effects of the accident but from other causes; and also contended that they had no notice that the bridge was out of repair. Judgment reserved. Z. A. Lash Q.C., and Wilson & Evans for plaintiff. John Creasor, Q.C., for defendant.

SATURDAY.

LAMONT vs. ROBERTSON.—The parties were engaged in real estate speculation in Manitoba, and the present action was brought to recover $650 belonging to plaintiff, which he claimed defendant invested without his consent. A trip to the farm of Finlay MacRae, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, on Monday last, found that gentlemen in the midst of his farm labors with half a dozen farm hands about him and nearly as many carpenters, all plying their labors under the able supervision of Finlay himself. The farm comprising in all about four hundred acres, lies about four miles in from Griffin's Corners on the northern confines of Glenelg, and is a most desirable prperty. It fell on Mr. MacRae's hand's somewhat unexpectedly, and, determined to make the best of it, he moved out there about three weeks ago with Mrs. MacRae and family. Since which time he has been pushing matters with characteristic energy. The farm combines what few others do—admirable adaptability at once for graingrowing and stock raising, into the latter of which Mr. MacRae intends to go extensively. Every thing is push and bustle, carried on, however, with great regularity; and buildings and outhouses are being run up with the rapidity of a western city, Mrs. MacRae. always hospitable and entertaining, is if possible more so than ever on the farm, and no one can visit there and come away without feeling a desire to "call again" on the first opportunity.—Chatsworth Cor. Advertiser.

LINES ON THE LOSS OF THE ASIA.

BY NICHOLAS ROSE.
(Published by request.)

Ye people all, come listen to
A narrative of woe;
'Twill cause your breath to heave a sigh,
'Twill cause your tears to flow;
Your sympathy you will extend
To those who have of late
Been called to mourn the loss of friends,
And their heart-rending fate.

'Twas in September, beauteous month,
In eighteen eighty-two,
The Asia steamed from Collingwood,
Manned by a hardy crew;
Some eighty passengers she took,
Oh, what a precious freight;
The worth of all those noble souls,
Say, who can estimate?

She clave the dark blue waves in twain,
And like a bird set free,
Glad to be loosed, she hastened on
Towards her destiny,
French River was her destined port,
But Ah, the storm did rivee;
She sank to tell a mournful tale
That words cannot describe.

Say, who is held responsible,
And who should bear the blame?
It this was done through carlessness,
Then, 'tis a burning shame.
Shall those who hold the public's trust.
And good thereby derives,
Grow heedless of that trust, and thus Endanger human lives.

Ah, little did they dream, indeed,
Who paced along her deck,
That 'ere the sun would rise again.
She'd be a total wreck;
That rich and poor, all side by side
Engulphed beneath the wave,
Should in the cruel arms of death,
Sleep in one common grave.

That soon, full soon above the roar
Of the destructive surge,
The raging winds would stoop to sigh
And chant their funeral dirge,
That for their sakes the bitter tear
Of agony would flow
Adown the cheeks of loving friends,
Crushed by their weight of woe.

That widowed wives and orphaned babes
Looked on the forms of some,
Who to their homes and fond embrace,
Ah! never more would come.
Who shall depict the mouruful scene,
The horror and the strife,
The dread confusion that took place,
The struggle after life?

No doubt a prayer that God may save,
Escapes the lips of some,
(While others stand in mute despair,
All motionless and dumb.)
I seem to hear their piercing cries,
For mercy they implore;
Ah! some have taught their lips to pray,
Who never prayed before.

And surely God did not despise.
The souls who sought His peace.
He gave them hope he gave them strength
He gave them dying grace.
God speaks to us, shall we be warned,
Or shall we still delay?
O, let us turn and seek and find
His mercy while we may.

WHAT IS THE REASON.

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT sell the best boots and shoes for the money, in Markdale?

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S stock are selling so fast?

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT are doing such a business in ready made and ordered clothing?

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT sell more tea than any other house in this section of country?

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S store is continually crowded with customers and that all go away well pleased?

What is the reason of such a rush amongst the ladies after TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S dress goods?

What is the reason that TRIMBLE & WRIGHT are taking the lead in each and every branch of their vast business?

The answer to these quieries is both short and simple, because they make it a point to give better value for your money than you can get elsewhere, because they keep a complete stock of just what the people want, because they buy for cash and sell for cash, and are thus able to get and give the very best bargains, and because these facts have become known to the people, and because the people know enough to go where they can deal th best. And if there should be one who is inclined to doubt the truthfulness of these facts we would respectfully request that you call and see for yourself.

Yours Respectfully,
TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest, were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

CHAPTER II.

As I quietly glided across the entrance lobby of Briteleigh Hall, in the wake of Mrs. Stokes and the housekeeper, I looked about hurriedly for some place within which I could conceal myself for a few minutes. The scullery door stood open. There was no one within the room. I stepped in, and gently closing the door, waited patiently, listening for the unloading of the remainder of the linen and the departure of Mrs. Stokes. What she thought of my sudden disappearance I am unable to state. She did not, however, to my knowledge, express openly any manifestation of surprise. Perhaps she feared that if she did so, it might implicate her in some unpleasant affair, and therefore wisely chose to be silent; or, more probably, thought that I was, as she expressed it, "a friend of the family," stealing upon them unawares.

Watching my opportunity when the coast seemed clear, I stealthily sallied forth, and made for the entrance hall and for the principal staircase. Probably the dog had not been unchained, for I neither saw nor heard anything of him. On reaching the first landing, I observed a door partly open. The room was superbly furnished. 'The drawing-room," said I to myself. Within, in an easy chair, sat a gentleman considerably past middle age, but tall and robust. The first glance at his countenance revealed a compound of the repulsive and the cunning, mingled with deep traces of continuous dissipation. He was reading a newspaper. I hesitated a moment, and then stepped boldly into the room. He looked up with an impatient expression of surprise and annoyance.

"Mr. Wintock. I presume?" making a low bow.

"What do you want here, fellow?" he replied, starting to his feet. "How dare you intrude into a gentleman's mansion and private apartment after this fashion?"

"Very sorry to discommode you, sir, but business is business, though it's sometimes rather unpleasant. I am here on the part of Mr. Warley." And then I briefly explained the nature of my commission and showed him my authority.

He got into at owering passion, and turning to the mantlepiece, rang the bell violently. "You sneaking, pettifogging bumbailiff, leave my house this instant. Here, Benetti!"—raising his voice—"Benetti, you rascal, I want you! Martha, loose the dog!"

Quietly walking to the door, I shut it, turned the key, and set my back against it.

Mr. Wintock seized the heavy drawing-room poker and advanced towards me. "You scoundrel! unlock that door; and stand out of the way this instant, or I'll smash——"

"Oh, if that's your game, governor. you had better not try it on," I interrupted, drawing one of my pocket companions and just showing him the muzzle; for my blood began to warm. "I don't want to do anything uncomfortable, but you know self-preservation is the first law of nature. If you are going to knock a hole in my cranium, I shall try and drill one in yours. Not a perfectly legal act, perhaps, but certainly expedient under the circumstances. Now, sir," I continued, "it's no use your getting into a passion with me, because I'm only an agent, you see, and obliged to do the bidding of my superiors. Besides, you will only make matters worse."

The first outbreak of passion over, he calmed down a little. "Well, that's true," he replied, "as far as it goes. And how on earth you contrived to get in I can't imgine."

"All stratagems, sir, are fair in war, you know."

"Did you get in through one of my people?"

"No sir, I did not."

"Hem!" he muttered to himself; "I am glad there are no traitors in the camp. They need not have been so sharp with me," he continued, addressing me. "The money will be paid without fail in a week at the latest."

"Extremely glad to hear it indeed, sir. I sincerely hope it will. In that case you need not care about me troubling you for a few days. I don't wish to interfere with your family arrangements in any way, or to do anything inconsistent with my duty. Lodge me comfortably and feed me fairly, and you'll scarcely know I'm here. I'm used to this sort of thing, sir; you need not mind me in the least, I assure you."

He had put down the poker and was leaning against the mantlepiece. Someone tried the door, and then tapped. "Did you ring, sir?" It was Martha's voice.

I unlocked the door and stepped behind it.

Mr. Wintock stepped across the room and opened it. "Come again in a quarter of an hour."

"Very well, sir."

Martha retraced her steps down stairs.

"Now, Mr.—a—a——"

"Meredith, sir, at your service."

"Mr. Meredith, then, as you seem to be a reasonable fellow, perhaps, all things considered, it will be as well to waive my first intention of pitching you headlong out of the window, and try to accommodate you during your brief stay as well as our humble and limited means will permit." He said this with an air of chagrin and sarcasm that told plainly how much he was irritated at being overmatched. "Meanwhile, you shall, as you request, lodge well and be fed well until you take your august departure.

Some further conversation, relative to the matter in hand, followed; and after a short time, he rang again for Martha, who, after a brief colloquy received instructions to conduct me to the apartment I was for the nonce to occupy.

"Mr. Meredith," he said, as I was bowing myself out of the room, "there is one thing I should wish you to understand. We are very quiet people, and dislike being disturbed at night. The dog has usually the range of the house after ten o'clock. It would be as well to keep your room after that hour till the servants are about in the morning. He is an extremely savage beast, and some accident might occur."

"Indeed, Mr. Wintock? Then would it not be advisable, to avoid all risk, to keep him constantly chained up?" I laid my hand carelessly on my breast pocket as I spoke.

He understood the hint, and replied good humoredly: "Well, well; perhaps it would. Martha, tell Benetti to see to it."

"He meditates a moonlight departure," thought I, as I left the drawing room. "We shall see;" and I resolved to be more than ordinarily vigilant.

The room alloted for my temporary accommodation was in an upper story, in an angle of the building overlooking the most pleasant part of the park, and on the opposite side of that more immediately tenanted by the family. It was comfortably furnished, and my meals were regularly and liberally served. I did not, however, get much repose. My chief's caution, "to sleep with one eye open;" Mr. Wintock's behaviour at our first meeting, and especially his hint about the dog; together with the jealous suspicion with which Benetti evidently watched my every movement whenever I left my apartment—determined me to keep on the alert. It was my custom to remain the greater part of the night in my room, sometimes with a light, oftener without one, and as the weather was tolerably warm, not unfrequently with the window open. What sleep I had was chiefly snatches in the day time.

It was on the fifth night after establishing myself in my quarters at the Hall, and the great clock had struck the solemn hour of twelve. The house was wrapped in silence; not a sound seemed to break the stillness of the night. I had been reading, and overcome either by the lassitude consequent upon being shut up for several days, or the drowsiness attendant upon a protracted period of watchfulness, or perhaps by both, had dropped off into a dreamy doze. On the other side of the room—a capacious one—and opposite the centre table at which I was sitting, hung a large mirror; behind me was the door, shielded by a very handsome screen covered with richly ornamental oriental designs. Something partially roused me, and I looked up in that half-conscious, half-somniferous state subsequent to what is denominated as 'forty winks.' My candle was flickering in the socket. By its varying and fast decreasing light stood dimly revealed in the reflection of the mirror before me the vision of a haggard female face, peering at me intently around the extreme fold of the screen, which reached to within a yard of my chair. Such an expression I had never before seen on mortal physiognomy, nor ever wish to see again. Long raven black hair hung disheveled over a face, pale and haggard; the bloodless lips closed over the clenched teeth with desperate resolution; the brilliant flashing eyes glittered with an almost maniacal light; yet, distorted as were the features, they still bore traces of singular beauty. For the first time since entering the Hall, the strange story of the "white face," which I had heard at the Three Nags, flashed across my memory. For a moment, sense and reason seemed to reel, and I had well nigh fallen from my chair. Suddenly the lips parted in an attempt to speak, and the figure extended its attenuated arm, as if to touch me. At the same moment, a brawny hand was placed over its mouth and it was forcibly dragged, or rather lifted back behind the screen just as my expiring candle rallied for an instant and shot up its last bright gleam of flame. Then all was darkness.

Springing to my feet, I rushed to the door, overturning both chair and screen in my haste. There was neither trace nor sound of anyone near my chamber. The lofty staircase, the long passages, were silent and deserted. It was with sensations not to be described that I returned to my room, lighted a fresh candle, and sat watching and listening eagerly the remaining part of the night; but nothing further occurred. Nor was there the next day, on the part of the inmates, the most trifling indication that anything unusual had occured. I forbore to ask any questions, and kept my own counsel, determining, however, as far as possible, to unravel the mystery.

With this purpose in mind I resolved not to confine myself so closely to my room as heretofore. Of the supernatural I did not for a moment dream; but it did strike me that the face said to be occasionally seen at the windows, and which had certainly appeared to me, might possibly be a clever device, in the one case to frighten unwelcome visitors from the premises, in the other to bring about my own speedy departure. Yet that dark, sinewy hand—unless the whole thing were a delusion on my part—evidently coerced and prevented the intention of the figure. Then, again, it occurred to me that possibly it might be some insane member of the family, whom it was desirable to keep secluded, and yet not necessary to send away to an asylum, and who had during the night broken away from restraint. If so, what right had I to interfere, or to intrude upon Mr. Wintock's private affairs? I could not satisfy myself, and waited in a fever of excitement for some clue to guide me. So intensely absorbed did I become, so nervously anxious to discover the locality of my mysterious visitant, that I almost forgot the special business upon which I was engaged.

The next few nights passed without any further interruption on my privacy. My overwrought feelings gradually cooled down and I began to question within myself whether or nor the whole transaction was not a creation of my own imagination, a horrible nightmare, consequent upon the uneasy position in which I had sat and dozed. Dispassionate reasoning had almost brought me to this conclusion, when all doubts were solved by what shortly afterwards occurred.

Though of course I had the liberty of the whole house, which to a certain extent I availed myself of, it was my custom, at intervals during the day, to stand for a while at the opened window of my room, to inhale, for health's sake, the fresh country air wafted over the demesne of that noble park. My room had indeed two windows; but one of these only looked out upon a receding angle of the house, a few feet distant; the other, at which I generally stood, commanded a view of the whole park. Rural scenery is to me at all time an exquisite delight. I have stood for hours at that ancient Gothic window, gazing upon the grand old trees and broad expanse of sward, decked with bright spring flowers, and listening with enthusiasm to the melody of the countless merry song birds that broke upon the stillness of that dreary mansion.

One evening, just at dusk, I was leaning out, watching the fading twilight, and deeply intent upon the liquid music of a couple of nightingales, which had taken up their abode in a cluster of trees not far from the house, and were warbling their ravishing strains with thrilling effect in the solemn stillness of that deserted park. As I listened to them, some tiny scraps of a material of fine texture, apparently cut or torn from a lady's dress, dropped fluttering past me from above. On looking up, I beheld—attached to an improvised line of the same material, consisting of strips tied together, and which was evidently let down from an upper window—a white pocket handkerchief loosely folded. I could just discern a hand signalling me to secure the handkerchief. Though startled, I lost not a moment in doing so. The line was withdrawn, and the hand immediately disappeared. Shutting the window, I struck a light, and sat down in no little haste to ascertain what this might mean. On opening the handkerchief I found the interior covered with writing in large characters, not inscribed with pen or pencil, but seemingly traced with a piece of coal or a portion of burnt stick. With some difficulty, I deciphered the writing, as follows:

SIR,—I beseech you to pity and aid an unfortunate lady, imprisoned in her own house, and deprived of her rightful property by the grossest villainy. If you are a gentleman, be the instrument of my release. Next room but one to the roof—same size and arrangement of windows as your own—locked in.

MARIA WINTOCK.

"Then the tale I heard at the Three Nags has some foundation after all," I inwardly exclaimed, as every nerve trembled with excitement. Refolding the handkerchief, I leaned back in my chair to cogitate upon this strange communication. "The Hall is indeed haunted, yet by no spirit, but a being of flesh and blood. This is no maniac's epistle; nor was the apparition in my room a freak of imagination. No wonder the young lady disappeared so suddenly. Ah, Mr. Wintock, that is your scheme, is it?—a prisoner till she accepts the hand of your worthless, profligate son, and then her fortune will be a nice plum to relieve you from your difficulties. I wonder you have not killed her outright; but I suppose that would not serve your purpose. Help you, poor lady? Yes; that Jack Meredith will, scapegrace as he has been, if he has but half a chance. But how?"

Ay, how? There was the rub. My duty forbade me to leave the house for assistance and if I did so, I might not be able to effect an entrance again; and supposing this gained, might she not in the meantime be spirited away far beyond the risk of discovery? Should I resort to open violence, the odds were terribly against me. George Wintock, doubtless a strong, active fellow in ripe manhood; his father, an antagonist by no means to be despised; and that brutal looking Italian, who seemed to possess the strength of a second Hercules. That scheme would not work. What should I do? How communicate with my fair and oppressed correspondent?

After some consideration, it occurred to me that unless prevented, she would doubtless be on the watch for some kind of reply, and that I might avail myself of the same method of communication which she had tried with success. Taking out my pocket-book, and tearing from it a dozen leaves, I wrote on one of them as follows:

MADAM,—I am only a bailiff in possession but heartily at your service. I will be at the window to-morrow night when the Hall clock strikes ten. Tell me how I can assist you. If you are prevented communicating with me then, let the little scraps fall as before as soon as an opportunity offers. I will keep a sharp look out.—Your obedient servant,

J. MEREDITH.

Tying this and the blank leaves, along with a piece of stout twine for her use in future communications, in a roll with one of my pencils, and extinguishing my candle, I reopened the window. All was quiet without; and attaching her white handkerchief to the end of my walking stick, I thrust it out, and waved it backwards and forwards several times. The signal was perceived, the casement above was softly opened, and the line was again let down. Looping my note safely to the line, I had the satisfaction of seeing it ascend to its destination. It was eagerly clutched by the occupant above; her window was again softly closed; and I retired, but not to sleep, for every sense was straining with tumultuous excitement.

On the following evening, faithful to my promise, I was at the window a few minutes before ten. As the Hall clock boomed the last stroke, I felt a small roll of paper secure in my hand, and as before, retired to peruse it.

GENEROUS SIR—I am most wretched. Oh, help me, for the love of humanity! I am threatened with the most horrible fate, unless I consent to be dragged into a union with the younger Wintock, whom I utterly loath; or to make over the greater part of my property to him and his father. They have more than once hinted at immuring me in a private lunatic asylum for life. Such things have been done. At times I feel as if I really were insane. Can you not procure assistance, and free me from these wretches? Surely the law is sufficiently powerful to protect you in aiding a defenceless, but grossly abused and oppressed lady. I have now been here several years, and hope is all but extinguished. They have kept me constantly locked up in my room since the night I succeeded in reaching yours, as I had hoped undetected. Previous to then, I was only confined to the upper suite of apartments. I entreat you not to desert me. Oh, contrive some means of setting me free; and earn the everlasting gratitude of

M. WINTOCK.

P.S.—I will let down for your reply at this time to morrow evening, unless prevented.—Beware of Benetti.

"Well," though I, "this is an adventure. But how is it to be accomplished?" After much consideration I fancied that I had hit upon a scheme, and determined to communicate it to Miss Wintock, and, if she thought it feasible, put it in practice without any delay. It met with her approbation, and we at once proceeded to execute it. The plan, however, required delicate handling, with courage, calmness and resolution to carry it out. I told her the nature of the responsibility I should incur in deserting my post; but she urged me to undertake her release at all hazards, promising herself to liquidate any liabilities which might arise in consequence, so soon as she should be restored to the outer world and able to assume the disposition of her property. She had been detained a prisoner in the Hall since she was seventeen years of age. She had now just turned twenty-one. Her guardian had therefore no longer any legal authority over her. I felt that the urgency and peculiarity of the case would insure me lenient judgment, if not condonation for my breach of trust, in the minds of all right thinking men.

"Be ready at two to morrow morning," was my last billet, forwarded in the usual manner, "while the Wintocks are probably asleep. Keep up your courage, and leave the rest to me."

I choose the hour of two o'clock in the morning for attempting the rescue of the young lady, as having the greatest chance of success; for notwithstanding Mr. Wintock's hint that the family disliked being disturbed at night, I had discovered that both he and his son were in the habit of spending some part of it from home—where, I cannot say, but probably in some kind of dissipation. Both went out about nine o'clock. Mr. Wintock usually returned about one. His son was much more uncertain.

I have said that the entire edifice, and especially the roofs, were of very irregular build, and that my room was situated at an angle of the house. On the other side of the angle was a suite of rooms but little used. the window of one of them being exactly on a level with Miss Wintock's and about six feet distant from it, and to which room I discovered I could find access. Immediately above the room in question was a lumber-room, with a ladder from the door to the trap-door opening out upon the roof. Carefully watching an opportunity the next day, I slipped into the lumber-room, in which, among other things were a number of tools of various descriptions, and armed myself with a couple of stout screw drivers, with which I returned after noting that the ladder might easily be removed.

A little before two o'clock found me cautiously issuing from my apartment and stealthily creeping towards this part of the building. I did not much fear any alarm from the dog, as during my stay he had been kept chained up in the outer part of the mansion. I suppose Mr. Wintock had profited by my hint respecting the animal. Possessing myself of the ladder, I very quietly removed it to the room whose window I have described as being opposite to and on a level with Miss Wintock's. The next were moments of breathless anxiety and suspense. Slowly opening the window I waved my own white handkerchief—the signal agreed upon between us—and her window was then as noiselessly raised. I then proceeded to push the ladder very gently across until it rested upon the sill of hers, forming a narrow bridge from window to window. She was at her post, and grasping the top staff held it firmly. Seating myself astride, I gradually shifted a few inches at a time until I reached her. The Hall clock struck two as I stepped softly into her room, immediately withdrawing the ladder and closing the window. She was greatly agitated, and trembled violently. Taking my hand in both her own, she whispered a few words of impassioned thanks; and then we addressed ourselves to the task of getting out of and away from the house silently and safely. This we both felt would be no easy matter; for not only was the door of her own room locked, but also that of the room into which it opened, and through which we must pass before gaining the corridor which led to the staircase. Force I dare not use, because of the noise; and indeed it would have been difficult to force the doors, as both were of stout oak. Hence my provision of the screwdrivers.

The screws were rusted with age, and I was too little skilled in carpentry to work in the dark. I therefore lighted a candle I had brought with me, and labored heavily for about an hour, Miss Wintock bending over me to aid me with its light, until her long raven raven hair rested carelessly on my shoulder, she holding and shading the candle with my hat, lest its reflection should betray us to anyone out of of doors, as George Wintock in his return home from his midnight revels might observe it in crossing the park. At length I was successful; the last screw of the second door yielded. Extinguishing the light, we paused a few minutes to listen, and then stepped softly out into the dark corridor, I leading the van pistol in hand, and Miss Wintock leaning heavily on my arm.

Along the corridor and down the richly carpeted staircase we went on tiptoe and with bated breath, lest the echoes of that gloomy old mansion should arouse her jailers. Every instant we expected the dog to give tongue. The night was cloudy; but suddenly the moon emerged from behind a cloud, and for a few seconds illumined the sombreness of the antique entrance hall. I felt Miss Wintock start and shudder, press my arm and cling closer to me, with the confidence of a very child. It made my heart leap, and every drop of blood in my veins thrilled with a feeling of rapturous delight, hitherto unknown to me. I seemed for a moment to have the strength of twenty men, and almost longed to do battle on her behalf. We stood for a moment in the hall, undecided whither to try one of the long passages, or at once seek egress by the principal entrance. We chose the latter. Softly we passed across the polished oaken floor, and I began slowly and with extreme caution to undo the fastenings. Gently, one by one, each bolt and bar was withdrawn, the huge lock was turned, and the ponderous door swung heavily upon its hinges. Greatly exhilarated at our success, I turned to my companion with a whispered word of encouragement on my lips, when an unseen enemy struck me a tremendous blow on the head, driving me through the open door way like a ball from a wicket, and felling me like a log upon the gravel walk beyond. At the same instant a succession of piercing shrieks, so heartrending and despairing burst from Miss Wintock, that it seemed as if her reason was passing away in a continuation of convulsive efforts to regain her liberty.

How long I lay insensible upon the cold gravel walk I cannot say, but it could not have been many minutes. Probably my assailant was for the time too fully occupied in securing the re-captured lady to be to inflict any further injury on me. When I regained consciousness, the moon was obscured, and it was intensely dark, no star being visible. Bruised, sore, and bleeding. I gathered myself up as best I could, and endeavoured to collect my thoughts. But in what manner to act for the best, puzzled me. Should I wait till dawn, then hasten to the village, and endeavour assistance in rescuing the poor lady? For several reasons, I discarded the idea. Besides, I had in fact deserted my duty, and in justice to my employer, ought never to have attempted leaving the house. What was I to do?

Russian Refugees.

When the Ohio and Mississippi train from Cincinnati arrived in Louisville, Ky., recently, four queer looking citizens stepped off. They didn't seem to know where they were, or what they came for. One of them was a red-bearded, rough-looking old fellow with a face of an Israelite, stepped up to a reporter and in broken English asked where Fifth and Market was. The reporter happened to be going up that way, and told the old fellow that he would show them the way. Walking up the street with him, he fell into conversation, and after a time the stranger became confidential. He said his name was Saboski, with three unpronounceable given names. He talked in about English, and it was with the utmost difficulty and only with the most liberal guessing that he could be understood. His story was rather a strange one.

Saboski said that he and his three friends came from Cincinnati, where they had been stopping a week or more with a gentleman named Levi. They came to Cincinnati from New York, and to New York from Liverpool. They were Russian Jews, and had passed through all the fearful persecutions of last winter. Saboski said he and his friends had come from a little village in southern Russia, about forty miles south of Odessa. There was a grain orchard there, and when the troubles began was in a prosperous condition, and in a fair way to make a good living. His description of the outrages that were perpetrated on the people was terrible but graphic. He said, in his broken English that he couldn't bear to think of the horrors. It seemed like an awful nightmare to him. The peasants came into the village from all the neighboring country the 14th of February last, about midnight. They were five or six hundred strong, and swarmed about the little place drinking liquor and swearing vengeance against the Jews. The local authorities were either afraid to interfere or sympathize with the mob, and they made no effort to suppress the disorder. When the peasants had become sufficiently drunk to be ready for any crime they attacked a Hebrew gardener and knocked him down. He was left for dead, then they turned on the others. There were about two hundred Hebrews in the village, and when the storm broke they huddled together in Saboski's store for protection. They had no weapons of any kind with them, and could only wait and pray. The house was set fire to, and they were driven out. The peasants seem to have been mad with rage and crazed with liquor. They knocked women and children on the head like sheep, and some of the miserable wretches were cast back into the burning house. Some of the bolder men made a desperate defense of their lives, but they were overwhelmed and massacred. Many of the women were first outraged and then murdered. The outrages that were practiced on the helpless women were too filthy and too ghastly to describe. Nothing that human ingenuity could suggest was neglected. Saboski's wife was murdered before his eyes, and he himself has now a scar across his right temple, which shows how near he came to following her. About 130 were killed or maimed for life, and the balance were forced to leave home and country and fly to foreign lands. Saboski and his three companions made their way to Odessa, but had to seek concealment, as the excitement was at white heat there. They went to Berlin, where they were well cared for and then sent to London, whence they were shipped to New York by the Russian Relief Society. They are on their way to Birmingham, Ala., where they have friends. They are honest-looking men, but the shadow of a great calamity is on their faces, and they have a care-worn frightened look that is pitiable.

A Cool Tramp and a Cool Maiden.

A well-known printer's family met with a singular experience on Monday. The latter answered a knock at the door. A tramp asked for "a bite." She didn't like his looks, and told him so, and left. Shortly after his disappearance a neighbor's daughter came in and told the printer's daughter that the latter's clothes (and the washing) had just been stolen by the tramp she had turned from the door; that he had taken all down and done them up in a bundle before asking for the bite, and lugged off at his leisure. The two young ladies started in pursuit. At the Southport bridge they learned that the bundle and the tramp went down the railroad. They followed and soon overtook him.

"We want those clothes you stole from us!" said the printer's daughter.

"H'm! Well, I don't know but you can have 'em," said he, coolly turning over the bundle.

"There's a shirt or wrapper missing," said she, after looking them over; "now what have you done with that?"

"Got it on!" said the tramp, opening his vest to prove it.

"Well, off with it, then!" said the plucky maiden.

"What! here?"

The maiden paused, in a predicament. A gentleman friend was near, and she hailed him, telling all about the trouble. The gentleman friend took the tramp to the bushes near the engine works and stripped the shirt.—Elmira Advertiser.

George A. Smith, of Hartford, saw a runaway horse coming on the street, and as the flying animal dashed past, seized the reins of the sleigh, jumped in, grasped the lines, and in two minutes the horse was driving quietly along with a dead man beside him. Heart disease, incited by the excitement, had killed the man in a minute.

Artemus Ward.

Artemus Ward is a worthy companion of Irving, Holmes, and Lowell, and nobly excels Mark Twain and Bret Hart, in that his wit is never impure, never immoral, never irreverent. His lecture on "The Mormons," the London Times, quoted by Mr. Haweis, describes as "utterly free from offense, although the opportunities for offense are obviously numerous." The lecturer and contributor to Punch says of himself: "I never stain my pages with even mild profanity. In the first place it is wicked, and in the next it is not funny." Strange that so many would-be wits lack wit to discern this truism! Another sentence of Artemus Ward is in itself an answer to a dozen Ingersoll lecturers:

"'Are you a preacher?' says the royal duke, slitely sarkastical.

"'No, Sir. But I bleeve in Meetin' Houses. Show me a place where there isn't any Meetin' Houses and preachers is never seen, and I'll show you a place where old hats air stuffed into broken winders, where the children are dirty and ragged, where gates have no hinges, where the wimmin are slipshod, and where maps of the devil's wild land air painted upon men's shirt-busums with tobacco jooce! That's what I'll show you. Let us consider what the preachers do for us before we aboose 'em.'"

Artemus Ward's private life was spotless, and his personality most engaging. The writer resides near the birthplace at Waterford, Me., of the boy, Charles Farrar Browne. I find that the testimony of men who were his schoolmates accords with that published by intimate associates of his manhood, to wit, that with all his inborn love of merriment and of adventure, he was exceptionally pure-minded, considerate, and unselfish. He sought not to wield his wit at cost of another's pain. He was a devoted son. He would talk to his friends of his mother as other young men talk of a sweetheart. Mrs. Browne yet lives at Waterford, and welcomes every visitor who comes to honor the memory of her son. Artemus Ward's career was pathetically brief. Printer's boy in a dozen New-England villages and cities, editor in Toledo and in Cleveland, lecturer and traveller over the land, at the age of 29 he was the most popular humorous speaker in America. He crossed the Atlantic, and his success in London seemed boundless. But meantime he was rapidly wasting with consumption, and his face turned with his heart homeward and northernward. But as he was about embarking at Southamption he died—March 6th, 1867—having not completed his thirty-first year.—The Rev. T. C. Jerome, in the Chicago Advance

Wind Force.

Three years ago we were startled and horrified by the news that the Tay bridge had fallen when a train was passing over it, and the investigation which followed brought into prominent notice not only the very great diversity of opinion as to wind-pressure, but the necessity that some definite result should be arrived at. It appeared from the examination of engineers of the highest repute that they had no exact knowledge as to whether the extreme probable force of wind should be taken as 10 pounds on a square foot, or 20 or 40 It was admitted that pressures of 40 pounds had been registered, but they were considered so exceptional and restricted that it had been deemed unnecessary to make a full provision for them. But on Oct. 14, 1881, a pressure of 53 pounds was registered at Greenwich, almost at the very moment when 35 magnificent trees in the immediate neighborhood were prostrated; that particular gust of intense pressure was by no means restricted to an area of a few yards. Nor is this pressure of 53 pounds the highest that has been recorded. During a gale at Liverpool in March, 1871, the pencil anemometer was driven far beyond the scale, and was estimated to have marked a pressure of 90 pounds. It is impossible to say whether these are actual pressures or not. Prof. Stokes, who speaks with very high authority, considers that the register of a pressure plate is 80 per cent. too high, a correction which would reduce these pressures to 30 and to 50 pounds on the square foot; but many observers and men of great practical experience (among others Mr. Osler and Mr. Symons) believe that the registered pressure is, by a balance of errors, not very far from the truth.—Longman's Magazine.

A Wisconsin Snake Story.

Henry Fish of Lee Centre, who has lately come from Lone Rock, Wis., says: 'Andrew Harter of Lone Rock went out on a rocky part of his farm one day last spring, and while looking around saw the head of a rattlesnake protruding from a crevice in the rock. Taking in the general surroundings, he concluded that it must be a regular den of rattlesnakes, so he built a pen about ten feet square and three feet high about the place and awaited results. The pen was watched, and with a wire snare something like a fish snare seventy-nine snakes, varying in length from 18 inches to 4½ feet, were, during the summer, landed in a barrel placed inside the enclosure. Four of the largest were placed in the barrel on Decoration Day, and in November they were still alive. As they had been placed in the barrel as soon as they left their winter quarters, they had lived a whole year without anything to eat. As the snakes had not thawed out this spring, when Mr. Fish left, it was not known whether they were still alive or not."—Rome Sentinel.

A Good Little Boy.

A mother said to her eldest boy the other night at the supper table:

"Why, Franky, I never knew you to ask for preserves a second time."

Franky didn't say much, but his little brother Tommy, who was innocent of the ways of bad boys, spoke up with a guileless smile on his pure little face and said—

"That's because Franky lost the key he made to open the pantry. That's why he never used to want much preserves at the supper table. He used to get all he wanted before supper, but now he can't open the pantry."

After Franky's father had administered the proper corrective, and the stricken youth was left alone in the shed to repent his crime, Tommy remarked to himself, as he sat down to study his lesson:

"I expect poor Franky is sorry he didn't give me some of them preserves when I asked them from him. He will know better next time."

Lacrosse as an Advertisement.

The Dominion is being well advertised at present. Both the Federal and Provincial Governments are sending special agents to Europe, whilst the Canada Pacific Railway authorities are working for their own interests with the same end in view. Amongst the quieter agencies tending in the same direction may be noticed the lacrosse team which has recently left Toronto, composed of a very respectable lot of young fellows, who will do credit not only to the national game but to our incipient nation as well. We notice too that a Canadian paper has been started in London which will, no doubt, prove the means of communication to a certain extent between the British and Canadian public. The more thoroughly our advantages are known the more surely will emigration of a superior class be drawn to our shores. Our disadvantages are no greater than in many other lands, though of a different kind. Such a cyclone as the one that during the past week devastated a part of the State of Mississippi is unknown in Canada, though it is of no unfrequent occurrence over some of the Western States of the Union. What we in Ontario would more specially care to see is a number of tenant farmers to take up some of our vacant homesteads. We hope that our Local Government will see to it that special efforts with that end in view are speedily and thoroughly made.

A Picture in the Heart of An Oak.

A curiosity in vegetation has been shown our Watertown correspondent by Mr. Benjamin Marvin, of that town. It is a landscape, or rather a clump of trees, with trunk and branches and twigs as clearly defined as though drawn with ink or photographed by the sun's rays. The trees form a picture about four inches square, showing like the open leaf of a book, and the same on the opposite page. Mr. Marvin says it is a pretty good protraiture of the clump of trees which he felled, the picture appearing in the heart of the largest one. Perhaps it will be explained that this is a fungus growth, which starting near the bark, pushed its way inward and upward in the form shown. If so, it was a persistent and ambitious bit of vegetation, bound to go ahead through very discouraging circumstances. — Waterbury (Conn.) American.

A Virginian's Presentiment.

Miss Sue V. Wingfield, daughter of Judge Wingfield, of Bradford county, died recently at the residence of John A. Herring, Esq., near Bridgewater. She had been governess in Mr. Herring's family, and after an illness of a few days of rheumatism of the heart and lungs she passed away in the bloom of her young life. On leaving with the remains, Mr. Herring remarked that he would never see Miss Rebecca Davis, who was a member of his family, again, and gave instructions as to the disposition of her body, should anything occur during his absence. On the Saturday following, Miss Davis was taken suddenly sick, from which she died. She had long been one of the family and was greatly esteemed by those who knew her. It was a strange presentiment with Mr. Herring that he should express himself so confidently that he would never see his relative again.

Jealousy in Africa

When a Magololo suspects his wives he places a stone in a jar of boiling water or oil and orders them to fetch it up with their bare arms. He then judges of their guilt by the amount of injury they sustain. When a woman is thus convicted he makes her confess who seduced her. In vain does the helpless creature protest that she is innocent. Notwithstanding that her arm is severely scalded, she is subjected to the most cruel torture by a kind of thumb screw, (mbanilo,) which is applied to her head. A small tree is partly divided along the middle, the skull of the poor woman is inserted as if it were a wedge for splitting the tree still further. Great pressure is exerted by forcing the halves of the tree together with the aid of pulleys.—Africana; or, the Heart of Africa—the Rev. Duff Macdonald.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore to the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

OAKLAND, Ont., Canada March 17, 1883.

Messrs. A. H. Dixon & Son.

DEAR SIRS,—Yours of the 13th instant to hand. It seems almost too good that I am cured of catarrh, but I know that I am. I have had no return of the disease and never felt better in my life. I have tried so many things for catarrh, suffered so much and for so many years, that it is hard for me to realize that I am really better.

I consider that mine was a very bad case; it was aggravated and chronic, involving the throat as well as the nasal passages, and I thought I would require the three treatments but feel fully cured by the two sent me and I am thankful that I was ever induced to send to you.

You are at liberty to use this letter stating that I have been cured at two treatments, and I shall gladly recommend your remedy to some of my friends, who are sufferers.

Yours with many thanks

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner &Co's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at above Drug Store.

A house and lot for sale in Markdale, a very desirable place, apply at this office.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

Our correspondents will do well to bear in mind that their copy will require to reach us on Tuesday, to insure an insertion the same week.

DYSPEPSIA & LIVER COMPLAINT.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer, every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use according'y and if it does you no good it will cost you nothing. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

OH, WHAT A COUGH!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of 50cts., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your Cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves Croup, and Whooping Cough, at once. Mothers do not be without it. For Lame Back, Side, or Chest, use Shiloh's Porous plaster. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store Markdale.

We have a speedy and positive cure, for Catarah, Diphtheria, Canker mouth and Head Ache, in SHHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY. A nasal Injector free with each bottle. Use it if you desire health and sweet breath. Price 50 cents. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

The Toronto Daily World is the spiceist, newsyist paper of the day, only 25 cts a month, just the thing for mechanics. Subscriptions taken at this office will be sent direct through the mail, specimen copies can be seen at the STANDARD Office.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND

Is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate, It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

THE semi-annual meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association will be held at Flesherton, May 22nd and 23rd. J. A. McLellan, M. A., L. L. D., will be present and deliver addresses on several subjects, besides a good programme prepared by the local Teachers. A musical and literary entertainment will be given on the evening of the 22nd.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Wm. Lucas & Co. bankers, Markdale, have $200,000.00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest; moderate charges.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132 84.

Work given out. On receipt of your address we will make an offer by which you can earn $3 to $7 evenings, at your home. Men, Woman, Boys or Girls can do it. H. C. Wilkinson & Co., 195 and 197 Fulton St., New York.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

OBITUARY.

The sad duty devolves upon me at this time of recording the death of Miss Effie Vandusen at the early age of 18 years, 6 months and 22 days, which took place at the village of Flesherton, on Friday morning the 11th inst., about a week before this she was as well as usual and even within a few days of her death she was not thought to be dangerously ill. But when the heart is diseased it gives very little warning before it takes its victim. All the Medical Skill that could be brought to bear on the case by Drs. Christoe and Barnhart was of no avail.

Miss Vandusen joined the Presbyterian Church at Chatsworth when she was 12 yrs. of age, and since then she has been an exemplary Christian. Since she came to Flesherton she has been an earnest worker in the Church and Sabbath School; her place as a Sabbath School teacher will be hard to fill.

In accordance with her last request she was buried in Chatsworth beside her little sister Lydia. The funeral which took place on Monday was very largely attended, when the procession was leaving to meet the train, all the places of bussiness were closed out of respect for the deceased, Rev. A. Wilson conducted the funeral services at Flesherton. At Chatsworth, the services were concluded by Rev. Jas. Cameron and Rev. A. Wilson both of these gentlemen delivered very fine addresses. The coffin which was obtained by Mr. Hooper, from Toronto, was a fine specimen of workmanship, it was covered with beautiful wreathes of flowers presented by the friends of the deceased.

The procession from Chatsworth Station to the church was very large, being made up of a large number who followed the remains from Flesherton and an eqully large number who congregated there to meet the remains of their dear friend.

The Father, Mother, Brother and Sister have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole neighborhood. May they be supported and comforted by our Almighty Father, who alone can heal the wound inflicted.

A despatch from London, Eng., of May 10th says: The weather here is very bad. Cold and cheerless rains prevail, with a heavy fall of snow throughout Northern England. A terrific snow storm has visited Galloway, and the snow lies over two feet deep.

ESPECIALLY FOR LADIES.

Where Marriage is a Crime.—Love's Way Everywhere—Fortunes for Two.—Chit-Chat.

Where Marriage is a Crime.

Rev. George Hepworth, in a newspaper article descriptive of New York "fashionable" society, says of a certain large class: They have money, but that is only another way of saying that they can afford to do their worst and procure partial means of concealment. Their peculiarities are chiefly developed in secret and after dark. They dare not tell the half they know about their neighbors, nor listen to half what they know about them. Their gospel is the gospel of 6 per cents., and beyond a large income and unchecked passion lies the terra incognita of morality, which they have no desire to explore. Their time is spent in a round of pleasures, suggested by painful ennui. Intrigues of the most compromising character are not infrequent, and the air is at times made foul with scandals which point to the hopeless wreck of domestic happiness Now the wonder of this whole matter is that pure young girls can be fascinated by a man—I use the misnomer in the way of politeness—who ought never to throw a shadow on their path A marriageable girl who feels herself to be in the market is not in the slightest degree shocked because her lover dare not tell her where he goes when he leaves her; on the other hand, his known impurity seems to be an added charm in her sight. She has not been taught to set any high value on virtue, neither does she regard it as indispensable in a husband. She excuses the inexcusable and ignores the prime condition of happiness. So she can have money, she ceases to ask questions. It is better so, perhaps, because if she were at all curious she would never marry. Old-maidism is the purgatory of social life; and so, rather than live in purgatory, she moves into a palatial residence in the nameless region beyond. Who does not know that in the set to which she belongs simple honor and fidelity are regarded as "slow," and that the appetite for excitement is so quickened by the condiments of vice that excitement is tasteless and insipid unless it is highly seasoned with immorality. Nay, the whole community, for that matter, is wallowing in the pit. In dramatic representations, for example, Shakspeare is adored with a sham adoration, but never listened to with even tolerable patience. In the rivalry between Shakespeare and a semi-lewd play, the bard of Avon is voted out of the house. The sensational drama in which the heroine totters in the first act on the dizzy edge of a vicious precipice and in the last act falls into the fathomless depths of domestic infidelity, rouses us to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. Nothing pays so well in a play as disguised indecency; and if the disguise be very thin, we do not allow our scruples to mar our enjoyment. Good reading, also, has suffered a characteristic "sea change." In order to be really interesting, a novel must have a sulphurous plot, one the heroine or hero of which has a reputation which ought to bring a blush to the cheek of the reader, but which generally fails in the accomplishment of that end. We use the word "French" to express, not the nationality of a book, but its character—that is, its bad character. James or Howells may be found on the sitting room table, sham representatives of the style of writing we must enjoy; but Zola, always kept out of sight, has thumb-marks which show that it is the source of oft-repeated pleasures. The most salable books are made up of the piquancy of broken vows and the delights of a life of shame. This Moloch worship which demands that mammas shall turn their daughters into the open fiery and consuming arms of an unholy marriage, is far more prevalent than we think. Young girls are drilled into the belief that an elegant mansion on a corner lot in a matrimonial inferno is preferable to an honest snuggery on a side street in the matrimonial heaven. Money must be had at any cost, and since the only merchantable article in her possession is herself, the young girl gets the largest price the market offers, and runs the risk with the man who pays it. I use the word risk, but that implies a chance of happiness, and the chance is so small that I may as well be a little more exact, and say that she gets the largest price, endures the new relationship for awhile, and then either seeks her own pleasure in her own way, or applies to a divorce court for relief. A blasted life with fashionable society, or alimony as a last resort, is the history of scores.

Love's Way Everywhere.

A correspondent says: "Matamoras is at present excited over the elopement of Lieut. Col. Enlers, of the 4th infantry, stationed in this city. He is a dashing middle-aged officer, born in Mexico, but of German parentage. He is of good presence, plays the guitar, and sings Spanish love songs with a rich baritone voice. Directly opposite the officer's quarters, at Happy Jock's place, on Calle de Bravo, lives or rather lived, Senorita Refigia Carananya, a tall, pale, but rather pretty girl, of poor but very respectable parentage. The colonel had sung many love songs and exchanged many burning glances with his pretty neighbor, and a flirtation ripened into love and an elopement was planned. A few evenings ago a carriage drew up in front of a house about half a block below the residence of the pair, and, to lull suspicion, the gallant colonel got his guitar and sat on his balcony singing. Under the cover of this diversion, the young lady slipped out of the house and into the covered hack. As soon as her retreat was effected the colonel closed his serenade, with which he had charmed the old folks into oblivion, slipped down the back way and also entered the hack, which drove away, and soon the happy pair were in safety in Brownsville, on this side of the river, where the law or angry relatives could not reach them.

She Made Fortunes for Two.

Mr. Bell, the telephone man, is worth $6,000,000, and he has the most elegant residence in Washington. A man told me recently that his wife is very beautiful, and that she is deaf and dumb. Bell became infatuated with her beauty and married her. In experimenting with an audiphone, that she might be able to hear, he discovered the principle of the telephone. In this way his wife indirectly made his fortune. Her husband's fortune is not the only one Mrs. Bell has made. Andrews the portrait painter of Washington, owes his start to the picture of her face. Before this he had been unknown. He came here from Cincinnati, and had but little to do. Mrs. Bell gave him a sitting, and he had the luck to catch one of her most beautiful expressions. The picture was shown at Corcoran's gallery, and crowds went to see it. After this the unknown artist was unknown no longer. Orders poured in, and he has now made enough to build him a fine house, and he is the portrait painter of the capital.

CHIT-CHAT.

All red-faced women are not residents of Flushing.

Some people are like a well-used rocking-chair; they are always on the go, but never get ahead.

There's a difference between the affability of a young girl and the taffybility of an experienced flirt.

Most women tremble at the discharge of a gun, and yet they are perfectly familiar with powder puffs.

Dressmakers ought to make good railroad conductors, they are accustomed to making up long trains.

When an elderly maiden lady adorns herself with false hair, false teeth, paint, powder, etc., she is "making up" for lost time.

"O dear: I'm so tired. I finished cleaning house yesterday. What! you haven't begun yet?" This she says to all her neighbors, just to make them feel miserable.

"O dear! you've driven that hairpin way into my head," screamed a lady customer to the milliner, who was fastening a bonnet on her head. "Sorry, mum," replied the woman, "accidents will hairpin."

In Washington: "What does the figure on the capitol represent?" "Liberty." "Female figure, is it not?" "Yes." "Very pretty; but what kind of a woman is this symbol of liberty and independence supposed to be?" "A servant girl, I believe."

A man has invented a chair that can be adjusted to eight hundred different positions, and yet a man who suspected that his wife was going to ask him about where he was the night before couldn't get into a position in that chair which seemed comfortable.

The latest mathematical question runs as follows: Two girls met three other girls and all kissed. How many kisses were exchanged? In the hurry and bustle of newspaper life we haven't time to make the computation—we only remark that the whole business was a melancholy waste.

A lady never feels more like going home and raising a row in the family than when she adjusts her garments as she is about to pass a clothing store where she sees fifteen or twenty men standing around the window, and finds out after she has passed them that they were "dummies."

A fond and proud parent is showing a work of art by his daughter to the delighted company. "This crayon drawing," he says, "represents the interior of a railroad tunnel, through you will perceive a train is passing slowly." "Exquisite! Very fine indeed!" says one of the company, "but what makes you say that the train is passing through it slowly?" "B cause, sir," says the father acutely, "if it had been running rapidly it would have been out the tunnel long ago; don't you see?"

"You say your wife is trying to get a divorce?" said the lawyer. "Yaw," answered Hans Spreckendentson. "Yah, dot is so." "And now you want to sue Jacob Schneider for damages for alienating her affections?" "Yaw." "Was she a good wife?" "No, she vas a bad womans." "Did you love her very much?" "No, I'm petter midout her." "Well, if she was a bad woman, and you are better without her, you are not much damaged if Jacob Schneider takes her off yeur hands." "Yah, it looks like dot, ain't it. Mebbe its petter I don'd say nuttings aboud it. But, by shiminies, I pitties dot Yacob Schneider."

The Story of the Three Apples.

One of the Turgeneff's latest tales has a shrewd touch of humor. He recounts how Giafar, the renowned Vizier of Haroun Alraschid, while yet young and undistinguished, rescued a mysterious old man from assassins and afterward visited this old man at his request. The old man took Giafar by the hand and led him into a garden inclosed by high walls, in the midst of which grew a strange tree, in semblance like a cypress, only its leaves were of an azure hue. Upon this tree hung three apples) one of longish shape, and white as milk; the second round and red; the third little, shriveled and yellow. "Youth" said the old man, "pluck and eat one of these apples. Of thou eatest the white, thou wilt be the wisest of men; if the red, thou wilt be the richest; if the yellow, then wilt be singularly acceptable to all old women. But make speed; the charm loses its virtue within an hour." Giafar ruminated with much perplexity, "If I know everything," thought he, "I shall know more than is good for me; if I become too rich other men will envy me. I will eat the yellow apple." And he did so. The old man laughed with his toothless mouth, and exclaimed: "Good youth! in sooth thou hast chosen the better part. What need hast thou of the white apple? thou art already wiser than Solomon. Nor needest thou the red apple, either; thou wilt be rich enough without it, and none will envy thee." "Venerable sage," responded Giafar, "deign to indicate to me the dwelling of the august mother of the Commander of the Faithful." The old man bowed to the ground and showed the way. And Giafar is the greatest subject in Bagdad.

While a New York woman was passing a quarry a blast was fired. When she revived after being struck with a stone weighing fifty pounds the first words she uttered were: "Good laws! how glad I am that I did'nt have on my new bonnet!"

Willie has a four year old sister, Mary, who complained to mamma that her button shoes were hurting her. "Why, Mattie, you're put them on the wrong feet." Puzzled and ready to cry, she made answer: "What'll I do, mamma? They're al the feet I've got."

The Lesson the Eel Teaches.

"Well, boys," said the Old Settler, "spring's with us 'cordin' to the almanick, but natur don't seem to be in much of a hurry to git her new frock on, does she? They tell me ez they's still two feet o' snow back in the woods, and that the b'ars han't commenced to trapse 'round with their cubs yit. The way it looks now, 'bout all the brook trout we'll git 'fore the first o' June 'll be suckers. Well, suckers is jist ez good a fish ez swims, if they're only left to swim. When you come to ketchin' an' eatin' 'em you spile 'em. Whenever I see a man ez kin spend his time a fishin' fur suckers I allers thinks to myself, 'There's a fust-class mule driver spilt.'"

"Well, Major," said the Sheriff, who had been sucker fishing nearly all day, "I think fishing for suckers ain't any worse than bobbin' for eels, and every one knows that if there is one thing you like better than another it's bobbin' for eels."

"Right you are! He's a ganewine hunter, he is, an' don't wait fur his victuals to come a floatin' 'long inter his mouth. Take a nice cool night, when they ain't no moon, but when they's plenty stars a looking down at you from the sky an' a blinkin' at you from the water.

"An' you git in yer boat an' row out on the river, or out on the pond, an' every chug o' the oar-lock stirs up an echo over giust the hills, an' ev'ry swish o' the oar blade breaks the water into little waves ez turns white, 'z if they war kinder skeert o' bein' rustled 'round like that. An' bime by you git to the place where you're goin' to anchor, cause you know they's eels thar, jest a layin' low for suthin' new to pounce on. An' you anchor an' sink yer bob, big ez yer fist, an' in less'n the wiggle of a tadpole dip comes Mr. Eel's teeth inter the bob. They ain't no mistakin' it. He telegraphs it to you up the stick ez proper ez kin be, an' you feel it go clear to yer shoulder, and distribit itself from your topknot to your toes. Then you begin ter raise him. You handle him as gentle ez if he was yer sweet heart. Steady an' slow! Steady! Thar you have him to the top o' the water! Now's yer time to lose him if you don't look sharp! You rest a second, then zip! an' thar you have him in the boat, not a layin' like a stick, but a slashin' an' fightin' ez if he know'd what a durn fool he'd ben a makin' o' hisself, an' wanted you to know, b'gosh, that he know'd it.

"You larn suthin'a bobbin' for eels, boys. The way he sticks to the bob larns you—when you get a good thing, hold onter it; an' the way he fights arter he gits him in the boat larns you, b'gosh, to never give up when you are down, an' to never die till you have to. So don't come a talkin' to me about sucker fishin' bein' a sport like bobbin' fur eels, Sheriff, 'cause I won't have it, b'gosht 'lmighty."—New York Sun.

An Extraordinary Career.

Baron Ward, the famed Yorkshire groom, who played so prominent a part at the Court of Parma, has died at Vienna. The history of this extraordinary man is full of remarkable events. He left Yorkshire as a boy in the pay of Prince Lichtenstein, of Hungary, and after a four years' successful career on the turf at Vienna as a jockey, became employed by the then reigning Duke of Lucca. He was at Lucca promoted from the stable to be valet to his royal highness, This service he performed up to 1846. About that time he was made Master of the Horse to the Ducal Court. Eventually he became Minister of the Household and Minister of Finance, which office he held when the Duke abdicated in 1848. At this period he became an active agent in Austria during the revolution. As Austria triumphed he returned to Parma as Prime Minister, and negotiated the abdication of Charles II., and placed the youthful Charles III. on the throne, who, it will be remembered was assassinated before his own palace in 1854. It should be observed that as soon as Charles III. came to the throne the then Baron Ward was sent to Germany by his patron as Minister of Plenipotentiary to represent Parma at the Court of Vienna. This post he held up to the time of his royal patron's tragical end. When the Duchess Regent assumed State authority Ward retired from public life, and took to agricultural pursuits in the Austrian dominions. Without any educational foundation he contrived to write and speak German, French and Italian, and conducted the affairs of state with considerable cleverness, if not with remarkable straightforwardness. Baron Ward was married to a humble person of Vienna and left four children. Perhaps no man of modern times passed a more varied and romantic life than Ward, the groom, statesman and friend of sovereigns. From the stable he rose to the highest offices of a little kingdom, at a period of great European political interest, and died in retirement, pursuing the rustic occupation of a farmer, carrying with him to the grave many curious State secrets.—London (England) Sportsman.

Another Narrow Escape.

Some time since the papers published a thrilling story of the narrow escape of Capt. Worth, of the Brooklyn police force, from being shot by a thief. The man who was alleged to have made the attempt was arrested, and his pistol taken from him and sent to the property clerk at Police Headquarters. I was at headquarters a few days ago, when an old lady, who claimed to be the mother of the owner of the pistol, called to get her son's dangerous weapon.

"What do you want with a pistol!" asked the property clerk.

"It's useful 'round the house."

"What for?"

"Why, I have used it for many years for driving tacks. It's rusty and won't go off, and makes a capital hammer."

When the weapon was produced the woman's statemen was found to be correct. It would have gone to pieces before it would discharge a ball.—New York Star.

A MINISTER'S ESCAPE.

From the Asylum to the Bosom of His Home—How it was Done.

A prominent minister residing in Vermont made the following statement, which is herewith reprinted entire:

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have always shrunk from appearing prominently before the public, but a sense of the duty I owe humanity and the world prompts me to ask this opportunity for making a brief statement in your paper.

Whether it be true with others I cannot say, but during my entire life I have frequently been conscious that something was slowly and silently working to undermine my health and life. What it was I could not tell, but that some enemy of my being was devouring me within I was certain. At times I would seem comparatively well and then I would be attacked with the most distressing symptoms. I would feel peculiar pains in various parts of my body, my head would seem heavy; my respiration labored; my appetite would be ravenous one day and I would loathe food the day following. Then again I would lose all interest in life; would feel weary without exertion; would become sleepy at mid-day and restless at night. Occasionally my breathing would be labored and my heart almost motionless, while at other times it would palpitate violently. I thought these troubles were the result of malaria, and I treated them accordingly, but I got no better. Shortly afterward my stomach became deranged, my food failed to digest, and the fluids I passed were of a peculiar odor and color. And yet I did not realize that these things meant anything serious. Finally I consulted a number of eminent physicians, each one of whom took a different view as to the cause of my troubles. One said I was suffering from brain disease; another spinal difficulty; others heart affection, kidney disease, etc. My symptoms were terrible, and in the hope of relief I was cauterised, cupped, blistered and subjected to almost every known form of treatment. During one of these attacks while at Red Bank, N. J., a physician was called, and left a prescription. After he had gone, I requested a friend to go and ask him what he thought of my trouble. The reply was: "Oh, he will be all right in a few day; it is only an attack of delirium tremens." He was at once informed that this was impossible, as I had never used any kind of intoxicating drinks, whereupon he returned, made inquiries, and changed his prescription. But all the care of my friends and physicians availed nothing. I grew worse constantly, and what is more terrible to think of, I did not know what ailed me, nor could I find any one who did.

During the summer and fall of last year my pulse ranged from 120 to 130 per minute; I had no relish for food, and was indeed a most pitiable object. I continued in this state until last December, when I became unconcious and lost my reason, though I had two physicians in whom myself and friends placed implicit confidence. In this condition I was taken to Brattleboro, Vt., for the purpose of being placed in the insane asylum. I remained there until last April, being attended all the while by my faithful wife who never left me and believed that some disease and not insanity was the cause of all my trouble. I regained consciousness in March last and insisted upon being taken home. The physicians advised that I remain, but I insisted upon leaving, and we began the journey, travelling slowly. I was met at the dock by a friend whom I recognized and then I became again unconcious and remained so for over a week. When I once more recognized my friend and knew my surroundings I determined to try, as a last resort, a treatment of which I had heard much but knew nothing. Neither myself nor friends had much faith that it or anything could help me, but we resolved to try. We accordingly dismissed the physicians, gave up all other remedies, and I rejoy to say that with the blessing of Him who guided us, I am to-day a well man; having not been so vigorous for many years, and I owe it all to the wonderful, almost miraculous, power of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy which I used.

You can well imagine how grateful I must feel under the circumstances, and, like a new convert, I earnestly desire that all who are suffering should know and avail themselves of this means of recovery. Had it not been for the remedy above named I should doubtless now be within the walls of an asylum or in my grave. The great trouble with my case was that no one seemed to know what I was afflicted with, and I am positive that thousands of people in America to-day are in the same or a similar condition, and do not know its cause. Kidney troubles are the most deceptive of all diseases. They have no symptoms of their own, but often show the symptoms of nearly every known complaint. I know that people are dying every day from supposed consumption, apoplexy, heart disease, spinal complaint, and many other diseases, when, could the real cause be known, it would be found to originate in the kidneys. In their advanced stages kidney troubles are the most terrible of all known maladies, as my own experience can fully verify. That I had Bright's disease of the kidneys there can be no doubt. That the symptoms were those of many other diseases is equally certain, and that I was doomed to a terrible death had I not been saved as I was, I am positive. The following letters just received will confirm this:

VERMONT ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE,
BRATTLEBORO, VERMONT, Oct. 30, 1882.
Rev E. D. Hopkins:

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 21st inst. received. We congratulate you not only upon the continuance of your health, but also upon its apparent continual improvement. Few persons, I think, have passed through so exhausting an experience as you and rallied from it, Certainly I cannot recall one who came to us in so critical, and for days and even weeks in so hopeless, a state for amendment as you, and who survived and recovered from it; for, I think, you may now consider yourself recovered and no longer on the convalescent list. Hoping for the continuance of your present health, with the best wishes from all here.

I am, yours truly,
J. DRAPER.

OCEANIC, N. J., Nov. 2, 1882.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Replying to your letter I would say, I have been acquainted with my highly valued friend, the Rev. E. D. Hopkins about eighteen months, and very intimately acquainted for about [illegible] months past. For a little more than [illegible] months he was an inmate of my house, and we enjoyed constant intercourse with each other. When he came in April last he was almost a perfect wreck in point of health, and thought he had come to us but to die. But afterwards he began the use of some of H. Warner & Co.'s remedies, namely: Safe Cure, Safe Nervine and Safe [illegible]. From almost the time he began their use improvement was very marked and [illegible]ful, and when he left us, after having used some two dozen bottles, he was like a new man. The change was the most remarkable I ever witnessed.

SAMUEL MILLER,
(Pastor of the Presbyterian Church.)

In view, therefore, of these facts and hope that all who read this may take timely warning, I make this open statement freely and for the good of my fellow men.

Sincerely,
(Rev.) E. D. HOPKINS.

GENERAL DEBILITY.

Debility is a term used to denote a defect of blood. The nutritive constituents of the blood are in less than their regular proportion, while the watery part is in excess. Debility is of frequent occurrence. It is incident to a variety of diseases. The lower limbs are apt to be swollen. The patient is feeble and cannot endure much exertion. The circulation is irregular, almost always weak. Palpitation of the heart is a very common symptom. Violent exercise often throws the heart into the most tumultuous action. The vital functions are languidly performed. The muscular strength is diminished, fatigue follows moderate or slight exertion, the breathing, though quiet when at rest, becomes hurried and even painfully agitated under exertion, as in running, ascending heights, etc. The nervous system is often greatly disordered. Vertigo, dizziness, and a feeling of faintness are very common. Violent and obstinate neuralgic pains in the head, side and breast, or other parts of the body, are also frequent attendants upon the disease. The secretions are sometimes diminished. In females the menses are almost always either suspended or very partially performed. The bile is scanty, and constiveness, with unhealthy evacuations from the bowels, and dyspeptic state of the stomach are extremely common symptoms.

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

TORONTO, ONT., November 20, 1882.
H. R. STEVENS, ESQ., Boston:

Sir—I have much pleasure in testifying to the virtue of the VEGETINE. For years past I have suffered exceedingly from chronic headache and general debility, from which I obtained no permanent relief until I was induced about a month since, to try the VEGETINE. I am better in health than I have been for the last four years; enjoy my food better, am much stronger, and quite free from my old enemy, headache. Hoping that my testimony may induce others to try the same remedy. I am,

Respectfully yours,

A Mortgage Paying Clock.

A gentleman writes to the New York Tribune as follows: The notice of the death of Jeremiah Curtiss reminds me of a pleasant acquaintance with that gentleman, and the story of a clock, as related by him at his house twenty years ago, more or less. He called my attention to a clock standing at the entrance to the drawing-room at the head of the first flight of stairs. It was an old-fashioned affair, with its case standing some six feet high. Mr. Curtiss' story ran thus:

In the previous summer he had been travelling in the State of Maine with his wife, who was a native of that State. She expressed a wish to visit the home of her childhood, which had now passed into the possession of strangers. Thither they went, and upon entering the house she discovered that the old family clock was standing in its place as she had known it in her childhood days. She expressed a wish that we might purchase it, if the owners could be induced to sell. A proposition was therefore made for the purchase of the old clock, which was finally accepted, and the price of $50 was paid. The clock was packed and sent to Brooklyn, and taken to a shop for complete renovation and repair.

The clock man reported the clock a valuable one, saying that it was of German manufacture, and that it was good for another 150 years. Then Mr. and Mrs. Curtiss consulted together, questioning among themselves if they had not paid too small a sum for the clock, considering its reported value.

In order to quiet their consciences in the matter they resolved to send the people of whom they had purchased the clock another sum of money, and accordingly $150 was sent. By return mail a letter came from the mother of the family, acknowledging the receipt of the money, and thanking Mr. and Mrs. Curtiss most heartily, saying:

"That money came straight from Heaven; for a demand had just been made for a payment on the mortgage on our place, and we had not the money to meet it, and we had given up in despair that our home must go. Just then your money came, which has enabled us to make a payment, and our home is saved."

Touched by the pathetic story above related they wrote to ascertain how much the mortgage was upon the place. In reply it appeared that the original mortgage was for $1,000, which was now reduced by the $150 just paid. Another consultation followed, in which the value of the clock was considered and the satisfaction it was affording them, and the result of the conference was that the old farm in Maine should be cleared of its mortgage, and thereupon a sum was remitted for the purpose.

Shakespeare's "Macbeth" Taken from the Bible.

You will find the principal characters of "Macbeth" in the Book of Kings. Jezebel in the Bible is "Lady Macbeth" in the play. She it was that stirred up her husband to do all the deviltry he did. Then take Hazael, a servant to the King. Under the influence of his wife, Jezebel, he plots to kill his master, and become King of Syria in his stead. This plot is successful, and Hazael is crowned King. This character exactly suits that of "Macbeth." The minor characters can also be found in the Bible. Of course, Shakespeare has altered the words, but the plot and characters are to be found there. Dr. Halsey, in his lectures on Shakespeare at Princeton College, stated that Shakespeare's regular practice was to study the Bible seven hours a day. There were not so many Bibles in his time as there are now, but although very costly, he had one, and made a daily practice of studying it. Where Dr. Halsey got his information I do not know, but presume he is correct.

Though Shakespeare was undoubtedly a great man, I think he is considerably overrated, so far as his originality in concerned. I think he was not endowed with the genius of originality, but rather with the genius of arranging the writings of those gone before, and re-writing them in an attractive style. —Rev. Richard Lee, D. D.

A Tornado's Force.

A vivid impression of the sudden fury of the Southern cyclone is conveyed by this brief statement of Mr. B. F. Jones, of Beauregard, Miss., who, the moment he saw the danger coming, called his wife and little boy into the yard and made them lie flat on the ground and grasp some little shrubs which stood within reach: "I put my arm about my wife," says Mr. Jones, "while with the other I clasped a small tree, and made my son lie close up to me, and then I said to them, 'Hold on, hold on, for God's sake! It is for life!' and then the wind came. There was a whirl and a roar. I was shaken, and heard the crash of my falling house. An instant and it was over. I still held my wife in my arms, but she was insensible, and my boy was still nestling close to me, but bruised and bleeding." All three escaped without serious injury, thanks to Mr. Jones presence of mind and the prompt obedience of his wife and child.

Prepare yourselves for the world as the Grecian athletes used to do for their exercises; oil your mind and your manners to give them the necessary suppleness and flexibility. Strength alone will not do.

He who makes a baseless insinuation against a neighbor's integrity or honor is guilty of an injustice which is atrocious and monstrous in comparison with the petty depredation of the despicable thief who breaks into his house and surreptitiously carries away his goods.

The Chinese Colony in New York City.

Chinatown is often mentioned in the New York papers. Anyone who knows where Chatham Square is, could find Chinatown quite easily. There isn't much of it, though, when it is found; just one end of a shabby street, Mott by name. Some of the house are tenements, with dark halls, rickety doors and windows and a perpetual bad smell. Others were once private houses, with high stoops and a moderately good appearance, but now almost as shabby as the tenements. Nearly every house has a sign in Chinese characters, and all the dingy stores have stripes of yellow or red paper in the windows inscribed in the same way. Many of the door posts bear similar embellishments, each and every one of which is the most utterly incomprehensible Greek to all white barbarians. Go into Chinatown any time you please, and you will find Celestials on guard at almost every doorway. They seem to be merely lounging about, and to have no particular interest in anything, but they are watching sharply all the time. The gambling places, opium dens and lottery shops are never without pickets, who eye all passers very keenly and answer questions without any waste of words. "No sabe," is the invariable reply to barbarians straying around with conundrums. "As tight as a clam" and "dumb as an oyster," are old phrases for reticence, but "as close as a Chinaman" would fit quite as well. A Chinaman can tell a reporter by instinct, and is closer than ever when a member of that worthy brotherhood drifts around after notes. He needs to be an especially energetic reporter who penetrates the picket lines of a Chinese gambling den or lottery shop. The barbarians can get into an opium "joint" without much trouble, but the other places are for Celestials alone. No one else could understand the games that are played, or what the queer combinations mean. It is said that both the games and the lotteries are all square, but only the Chinese themselves know whether they are or not. They are carried on in dark foul places, as far from the street as possible, and only those who know just how to proceed can get in at all. The stores in Chinatown do not invite the barbarian's trade. No goods are kept but those which Chinamen buy. Very few luxuries are found in any; but the Celestial is not a luxurious animal. Opium doesn't cost much, and the indulgence in it is the height of his extravagance. The idea of luxury does not exactly harmonize with the hard fact of existence on fifteen cents a day. As to

THE NUMBER OF CHINESE

In New York, it is not easy to get at the actual figures. Those in Chinatown could probably be counted, or a fair guess made, anyway; but they don't all live in Chinatown, by any means. That place is merely their headquarters. The number scattered through other parts of the city, chiefly with a view to laundry profits, is larger, I think, than could be counted in Chinatown itself. All the way from the Battery to Harlem, the whole eight and a half miles of Gotham's length, these unassimilating Mongolians are to be found. A few years ago, when there was an outcry about a Chinese invasion, it was said the number in New York was not less than 3,000. When the census men of 1880 came around, however, they figured up less than 1,000. They probably got as near the mark as the guessers, anyway. But there has been a considerable increase since 1880, and I suppose the present number might be put at 2,000 for New York City. Counting in those in Brooklyn and the Jersey suburbs, the total may not be far from 3,000. All are workers at one thing or another. There are no loafers among them, and no deadbeats, so far as heard from. The Chinaman's cardinal principle is to earn his living, which shows a vast abysm of difference between him and some proud Caucasians. But then, if he can live on fifteen cents a day, the earning should not be very hard. There are very few, however, who don't pick up at least two dollars a day one way or another, and some contrive to make from three to five dollars. There is a notion, I believe, that a great many Chinese in New York are employed as servants. I have read picturesque accounts of Fifth avenue ladies invading Chinatown in their handsome family carriages in search of likely young Chinamen for the domestic staff. But the number of Chinese employed in this way is really quite small—not more, I am pretty sure, than a couple of score all told. I do not know a single family that employs a Chinese servant. Where such servants are employed, the pay is about the same that good white servants receive. The stories about Chinese getting twice the wages of white servants are all nonsense. As a rule, where males are employed for household work, colored men are preferred. These are paid from $18 to $25 a month, with board. I do not think that any Chinamen get more, and I hear that a good many female servants in private families get as much. It certainly is not as servants that the Chinese interfere with the white labour in New York, and for that matter their interference with it is very little any way.

WAR IN CHINATOWN.

At present there is much excitement in New York Chinatown over a sort of "boss" question. The Sun's Chinese reporter, Ah Wong, has made an ambitious attempt to write it up in English, with an amusing result as to grammar. But this English grammer of ours can trip up lots of folks besides the heathen. The Tom Lee already mentioned has carried things with a high hand in many ways. Though no longer a deputy sheriff, he still assumes airs of authority. He has played boss so long that the thought of giving it up now goes very much against the grain with him. Besides playing deputy sheriff, he has exercised the functions of "head man" in the Mott street colony for some years. Now a large faction down there wants to depose him, and another faction objects. Ah Wong says "there is danger that the unpleasantness will not only be the means of the eventual breaking up of several leading Chinese business houses, and a whole serious of expensive law-suits but even the shedding of heathen blood is hinted at." The two factions are, locally known as the Sin Ning and Sung Chong men on one side and the Ha Sin Ning men on the other. Tom Lee is a Ha Sin Ning man, and the other heathen wants him to step down and out. They have been holding meetings in Oong Wah's grocery, with a view to bouncing Tom, and it certainly looks very much as if Tom would soon find things made pretty warm for him. But it is to be hoped that the row will be settled without any shedding of heathen blood by heathen hands. The civilized hoodlum can do enough of that.

THE CHINESE PAPER.

The Chinese paper that was started a couple of months ago is doing pretty well. It had a strike in the office the other day, but the editor, Wong Chin Foo, managed to overcome it. His staff, consisting of a single Celestial skilled in the art of printing Chinese characters on paper in such a way that plates for printing could be prepared from them, struck for an advance of wages from $12 to $15 a week. Wong Chin Foo refused and the staff retired, with a view to starting a laundry. Wong Chin Foo hunted around for another staff and finally found one willing to set up tea-chest and fire-cracker literature for the $12 a week despised by his predecessor. So the Chinese-American sails in smooth water again. It does not promise to make Wong Chin Foo a millionaire, but it gives him a living anyway, and it may do better by and by. The newsboys sometimes offer it for sale as a curiosity, but I have not yet seen any barbarian invest in it.

Etiquette of the Gallows.

Anecdotes of scaffold etiquette are quaint fragments of lore worth repeating. It seems that there was a regular code for settlement of all questions of precedence, or for the regular conduct of the "business" when a question arose. Thus when different degrees of nobility met a common fate beneath the executioner's axe, a duke was first decapitated, then an earl, and after him a baron. As an instance of this, when the Earl of Kilmarnock offered the priority of death to his fellow-sufferer, Baron Balmerino, the Sheriff interfered and would not permit the Earl to be executed in any other than his proper order. The right of preference was something claimed by the condemned themselves, as when once a sweep and a highwayman were being conveyed to Tyburn Tree in the same cart. As they went up Holborn Hill, the highwayman haughtily exclaimed to the chimney sweep, "Stand off, fellow!" to which the knight of the brush replied: "Stand off yourself, Mr. Highwayman; I have as good a right to be here as you have!" There are not wanting other rules and forms to be observed. When Capel was about to address the spectators of his death with his hat on, the executioner commanded him to take it off before he addressed the people.—Giblet Lore, by William Andrews, F.R.H.S.

A Crown for Sale.

London is the mart of the world. You may buy anything here, from a wife or a white slave, to a castle, a palace, or a pedigree. It is not often, however, that a crown is in the market. Such is the case, in all sober seriousness, to-day. There is an island somewhere to the east of Sardinia, to be bought, all except the port, which is the property of King Humbert. The rest is en vente, the price being £30,000, and the purchaser will be permitted, if it suits his caprice, to assume the name, style, and title of King, such being the designation of the vendor, who prefers hard case to barren acres and barren honor, like a wise old Roman. Here is a fine chance for Mr. Shoddy, Mr. Brummagem, and those numerous plutocrats who will back any political party that will covenant to give them a Baronetcy in return for hard cash and their votes. A King is surely a cut above a Baronet, and, among other advantages, he could make all his progeny Princes and Princesses, and he might recoup himself by selling titles ad libitum.—From the London Truth.

A Canine Witness.

At Bow Street Police Court, London, a fine Newfoundland dog appeared lately in the witness box, his fore paws resting on the witness box edge, while he gazed intelligently around. His evidence was interpreted to the Court by his master, a Mr. Lyford. It was to the effect that the dog had run down the steps of the Thames embankment to enjoy a splash when he observed a woman struggling in the water. His first impulse was to plunge in after her, but a moment's reflection told him that there would be great difficulty in landing her without assistance. He therefore hurried back to his master, looked up into his face, gave two short barks, and ran down the steps again. When he saw his master following he jumped into the river, and dragged the woman to the embankment. Meanwhile Mr. Lyford had walked into the water up to his knees, and was able to reach the woman with his cane, and to assist in pulling her to the shore.

A Man who Never Drinks Water.

A gentleman of this town having recently made a trip through Webster county, Kentucky, tells us of a man he met who has never taken a drink of water, though now 35 years of age. His name is Thomas Lawton, and he is a kinsman of W. C. Carnahan, of this place and Mr. Carnahan vouches for the truth of the statement that he never drank water. Mr. Lawton says that he has no desire whatever for the purest beverage known to creation; neither has he any inclination to partake of it in any of the adulterated forms. He has had raging fevers and shaking chills, but nothing in his composition calls for a drink. He drinks milk for its nourishing virtues and coffee as a preventive for painter's cholic, for he is a painter by trade. He once drank some mineral water, taking it as a tonic, but the fluid was so repugnant to his taste that he did not remain long at the springs.—Crittenden (Ky.) Press.

The Microphone.

Mr. Stroh, during a discussion at the last meeting of the Society of Telegraph Engineers, described a highly ingenious experiment with the microphone, from which he deduced that "during the time when the carbons are really in what is called microphonic contact, they are not in contact at all, or, at all events, that there is a repellant action at the point of contact. In the experimental apparatus one small rod of carbon was attached at one end of an almost frictionless oscillating rod, having on its opposite side an extremely light concave reflector. The other end of this carbon rod fell across another carbon rod, which was fixed. The displacement of a spot of light reflected by the mirror showed that the upper carbon was repelled through the two thousandth part of a millimeter.—Scientific American.

THE IMPORTED KIND.

Jupiter, having created the mosquito, the flea and all the vile orders of the entozoa and the epizoa, paused for a moment in perplexity.

"Now, what in thunder shall I make for them to prey upon?" he asked himself musingly.

Suddenly a bright thought struck him.

He made man.

"And so," says the narrator, closing his story, "they took him up to the cemetery in a gold-mounted hearse, with four black horses and all the bands in the garrison playing the 'Dead March!'"

"Very grand, I dessay," remarks the listener, "but I don't care for style. Going to the cemetery on foot is good enough for me!"

Guibollard has read in a journal scientific that we were coming to construct at the Estranger a telescope reapproaching the moon at thirty two leagues of our globe.

"The imprudents!" he cries himself with terror; "they will so much do that they will make her fall upon we!"

"Prisoner, why did you kill your wife?"

"Because life with her had become unbearable."

"You should have separated from her."

"I had promised that I would never desert her while she lived."

Dialogue between a young clerk and his employer:

"Did you wish to speak to me, young man?"

"Yes, sir, if you please, sir. You see, sir, at present I am doing precisely the same work that X. does, and I get thirty francs a month less pay. I feel sure that when you come to consider this you will—"

The artist examines it carefully and with perplexity. At last his face lights up.

Barnum's Elephants Bathing.

When Barnum's elephants were bathing in the Missouri River at Omaha two years ago, Pilot—the ugly one just killed—and Albert refused to come out of the water with the others. They were in fact, heading for the opposite shore when a keeper named Artingstall plunged in and swam out to them, carrying his "prod" in his mouth. One blow from Pilot's trunk or foot would have sent him into eternity. He swam to the further side with one hand and with the other prodded away at Pilot. Recognizing his voice and catching sight of the fork, they turned toward the shore. Finding that he could not keep up with them, Artingstall made a spurt, and seizing Pilot's tail, mounted him, pretty nearly worn out. Pilot's sides were wet and smooth as glass. With one foot on his back, the other on his head, he reached shore, followed by Albert, amongst the shouts and cheers of circus men and spectators. The herd, which had been waiting for them, stampeded and rushed up the bluff where the company were sitting. The most daring riders, intrepid trapezists, acrobats, side-show talkers, and canvas men tumbled to the sands twenty-five feet below. Then the herd, satisfied with the sensation they had produced, trotted quietly to the tent.

Sixty Hours in the Water.

A remarkable instance of sustained muscular effort is given in the Medical Press as having occurred in an Australian mine. The drift from one shaft having unexpectedly broken into another, a rapid inundation took place, so that in a few minutes the lower levels were flooded and the water stood thirty feet in the shaft. Twenty-seven men in one part of the workings were unable to ascend the shaft, being caught in a drift where the water soon rose so high that only by clinging to the timbers could they keep their chins above it. One by one during the terrible sixty hours that elapsed before help came did the men drop off exhausted; but five of them succeeded in holding during the whole of that time, and were brought out alive. The bodies of the other twenty-two were found scattered about on the floor of the drift. Great indeed are the strength and tenacity inspired by desperation, when they could enable five men to hang on by their hands with their bodies immersed in water for sixty hours.

An old colored preacher in Atalanta, Ga., was lecturing a youth of his fold about the sin of dancing, when the latter protested that the Bible plainly said: "There is a time to dance." "Yes, dar am a time to dance," said the dark divine, "an' it's when a boy gits a whippin' for goin' to a ball."

MARKDALE, MAY 17TH 1883.

"INDEPENDENT PAPERS."

The Advance displays so much gross ignorance in his remarks on this question that it is needless to try to drive anything else into his crannium, for, the softer the head, the more difficult it is to drive anything into it. And as to Conservatives being disgusted with the peculiar course the Advance has followed on political questions, we could point out liberal Conservative subscribers to that paper who have expressed their utter disgust and disapproval, and though we here withold names, they are among the most respectable men of Flesherton Village, Artemesia and Osprey Townships.

ADDITIONAL MAIL SERVICE.

We have read a letter this week from Dr. Sproule, now at Ottawa, stating that the petition of Mr. Thos. Kells, and others asking for increased mail service at Vandeleur P. O. was allowed. Vandeleur is to have three mails per week in the future to and from Flesherton, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, instead of two as heretofore. This will be a great convenience to that portion of Euphrasia and Artemesia, who get their mail matter at this P. O., and they have reason to thank Dr. Sproule, through whose influence, the desirable change was brought about. We congregulate the neighbourhood in securing this convenience.

ENTERPRISE.

McFarland & Hull's Stave Factory was raised a week ago, and will be pushed to completion with all possible speed. This new manufacturing industry will be a valuable addition to the place. A number of hands will be employed to work up the timber during the summer season, while a market is also created for that class of timber. The factory will be run by steam power from the engine which operates McFarland's grain elevator. Such a man as J. W. McFarland is the very heart and soul of a place. Since he came to Markdale, some 22 years ago, he has been always foremost in any movement that tended towards the prosperity of the place. From the very start, Mc. purchased anything in the shape of farm produce which was offered, while there was scarcely an article a farmer or mechanic required which he did not keep in stock, thus he built up a business which is second to none in Western Ontario. He is shrewd and far seeing yet venturesome, and has suffered many severe losses by fluctuations in the markets on various occasions, yet never a murmur, but rather energized forward to greater efforts. The value of such men as a motive power in the growth and progress of a place is seldom fully appreciated, while the whole community share the benefits thus brought about.

Fire in Markdale.

MR. MCNAE'S SASH & DOOR FACTORY BURNED.

On Monday last just as the men employed in Mr. Thos. McNae's Sash & Door Factory, near the Station in this village, had shut off steam and started for their dinners, they were recalled by seeing smoke issuing from the upper story of the building, and found on returning, the upper room so full of flames and smoke as to render it impossible to get anything out, however, some of the machinery on the lower flat was removed, although in a damaged state, by this time the crowd around the scene was very large and some worked vigorously in keeping the flames from the skating rink, which stood only 14 feet distant, and a house, owned by W. F. Doll, and occupied by Mr. Robt. Montgomery, which had already been stripped off its contents, doors and windows, which they succeeded in doing. Very fortunately the wind was East at the time, or the damage to lumber shingles, etc., of which there is considerable near the site of the building destroyed, would have been much greater, as it is, Mr. McNae's loss is about $9,500, insurance $6.000. Mr. Doll's slight damage to buildings, loss about $100, no insurance. Mr. Montgomery's furniture ruddy removed. At one time quite a commotion and stampede was caused by the steam from the boiler noisily escaping, but no explosion took place. Mr. McNae was fortunate in increasing the insurance last summer at the time of the elevator fire, and we are glad to learn that he intends to rebuild as soon as possible. The cause of the fire, no doubt, was accidental and probably originated from the engine house, near which it was first seen. Mr. McNae's loss over the insurance will not be less than from three to four thousand dollars, besides a great portion of his seasons work

Rev. Mr. Franks, (Methodist,) of Thornbury, preached in Rev. Mr. McDiarmid's pulpit, Markdale, last Sabbath morning. Though quite a young man Mr. Franks promises to be an able speaker, he was listened to with great attention by a large congregation.

Brutal Murder of a Farmer by his Son

FOULLY SHOT IN THE BACK.

ATTEMPT BY MURDERER TO BURY THE BODY.

On Saturday evening last a murder of an unusually brutal character was committed about a mile and a half East of the village of Williamsford Station, in the Township of Holland. It appears that about 4 o'clock a farmer named George Lambert, about fifty years of age, came into his house for supper and whilst in the act of washing his hands was shot through the back by his son Joseph, a young man aged about 20, of eccentric habits but not heretofore looked on as dangerous. The shot was fired through a stove-pipe hole from the upstairs. The old man staggered backwards and fell on the floor, when his wife, who was in the house at the time, ran to his assistance but was unable to get him to his feet. Meantime the murderer was loading his gun for the second shot when his mother ran upstairs and implored him to desist. On threatening to shoot her next she rushed down stairs and while in the act of doing so the second shot was fired, taking effect in the dying man's head and killing him outright. The murderer then loaded his gun a third time, came down stairs, took the murdered man by the boot leg and dragged him about 40 yds. to the foot of the garden, where he began to prepare a grave. He then got some lumber, which he commenced to measure and saw up for a coffin. By this time some fifteen or twenty of the neighbours, who were alarmed by the mother, had congregated, but were unable to do anything, as the murderer threatened to shoot the first man who approached him. A warrant was also got for his arrest, but neither was it considered advisable to do anything in the way of enforcing it till other devices for the capture of the murderer were exhausted. At length a man named Hauly, under pretence of rendering the murderer assistance, succeeded in getting beside him, when he took him by the legs an threw him to the ground, after which he was handcuffed and taken to the village. He says in committing the murder he was carrying out his father's instructions. It is said that he wished to get the farm and that the fact of his being kept out of it engendered the feelings which prompted him to commit the murderous act. A coroner's inquest was held this afternoon and a verdict of wilful murder returned. The murderer was taken to Owen Sound, where he will be detained till his trial comes on.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Township Council of the Township of Euphrasia, was held pursuant to adjournment on the 4th day of May, A. D. 1883.

Members all present.

Minutes of last session of Council read and confirmed.

James Struthers, Esq., was appointed referee on school business.

The petetion of William Stewart, and others for opening side road 6 & 7 received, and the Reeve and Mr. Ellis appointed to inspect said road and report at next meeting of Council.

The petition of John Kerr, relative to formation of a new school section, laid over until next meeting of Council, and the Clerk to notify interested parties.

A committee of the whole Council to take action concerning side road 27 & 28, in the 5th and 6th concessions.

The petition of John Talbot and others asking repairs of 9th line at lots 14, 15 and 16, received and Mr. Erskine, Mr. Boyd and Mr. Paterson, appointed a committee to inspect the road at this place, with power to take whatever action they may deem prudent, in the way of making improvement thereon.

The Reeve was appointed to confer with the commissioner of Collingwood Tp., in reference to improvement of town line at lots 2 and 3.

The Auditor's Report was finally Audited by council, and the clerk ordered to get 500 copies thereof printed.

The Reeve and Mr. Ellis were appointed a committee to enquire into the advisability of opening side road 6 and 7 in the 1st concession, and to report at next meeting of council.

The American Agriculturist for May is on our table. This valuable journal should be in the hands of every farmer and mechanic. Of course people generally think it won't pay to invest so much in reading matter, when the fact is such literature is worth ten times its cost to all who desire to improve and economise in farming. This journal is clubbed with the STANDARD for $1, subscription price $1 50. Orange Judd Co., publishers, 751 Broadway, New York.

A meeting will be held in the Revere House on Friday evening at 8 o'clock for the purpose of organizing a base ball club. A full attendance is requested.

M. Richardson is just opening a large consignment of Canadian Cottons, purchased during the late depressed cotton market. Also Denims, Tickings, Shirtings, Grey and White Cottons at greatly reduced prices.

FOOT RACE.—On Friday last two young bloods from Montreal, (travellers) named Mann and Trees succeeded in drumming up a foot race with our townsman, Mr. Jas. McDougall. Mr. Mann first had a race of 100 yards coming in a short distance in the rear, after which Trees, who claims to be the best amateur runner in Canada and who has taken three medals at the Montreal games, induced McDougall to try a race with him. By this time quite an interest was excited and money put up. After making a number of false starts they got off together, McDougall taking the lead and winning an easy victory, relieving the Montreal boys of some $15.

Mr. Robert Oliver who lives on the old Durham Road, Artemesia, near Priceville has a very fine herd of Devon cattle, which are the only herd of that breed in this section of country. He has a fine thoroughbred bull 3 years old, and also one 14 months old for sale. Any person requiring such would do well to see them as they are a valuable breed of cattle.

Great preparations are being made for the celebration of the Queen's Birthday in Markdale. The sports committee are making a determined effort to have a grand display of amusements, athletic games, horse races, &c.

Mr. A. Hill (tailor), returned this week from Staynor where he has been spending a few days.

SHANAHAN'S CARRIAGE WORKS.

Since starting business in this place two years ago, Mr. D. J. Shanahan has shown an amount of enterprise and push which is truly commendable. The buildings have been enlarged and fitteed up throughout, and are now perhaps the most extensive in the county, yet the immense stock of material together with the large number of rigs of various dimensions which are now nearing completion, fill the premises from top to bottom. The success which attended Mr. Shanahans efforts the past year, and the reputation his works already have for good material and excelence of workmanship and finish, has prompted him to risk a much greater outlay this season, consequently he is building about 75 wheeled rigs, about 25 of which will be finished by the 24th of May, independent of a number already gone out, and the public who may visit Markdale that day are cordially invited to examine for themselves while in town. The work turned out by this estsblishment, are indeed of superior workmanship and finish, and it will be to the advantage of those who contemplate a purchase to inspect Shanahan's fine display.

AN ACROSTIC.

Look out ye farmers and threshers all
And see that you buy for Spring, Summer
Right splendid good oil. [and Fall
Don't be misled by statements bland,
Insist upon having the very best brand,
Now good as ever, in fact it is grand,
Everlasting wear without grit or sand,
Machines run smoothly, no jarring or noise.
And engines too in its use rejoice.
Carding also it suits, as you plainly see,
Heavy gristing cannot do without me.
In fact all machines are blessed by its use,
New or old it will save from wear and abuse,
Every man try it, we are sure it will please.
Our initials, when read, will give the cue
In looking for oil, the best and the true,

CHAPTER III.

As I mused for a moment after my discomfiture, the singular construction of the roofs, as they appeared to me on my first view of them, recurred to me. "The very thing!" I said to myself. "It will be very odd if I don't manage to get into that house again."

With me to resolve was an act; and I immediately dived into the shrubbery, in order to work my way quietly and unseen to the back of the premises. It was well that I did so; for scarcely was I concealed by the foliage, when the front-door was again opened, and George Wintock and Benetti—the former bearing a light—stepped out upon the gravel-walk, and commenced making a circuit of the premises. Holding my breath, and crawling upon hands and knees into deeper shade, I contrived to avoid them. At length, apparently satisfied, after their scrutiny, that I had made off, they retired into the house. I overheard enough of their conversation, however, to inform me that it was Benetti's hand which had struck me to the earth.

I watched the window of George Wintock's bedroom till I saw by his shadow on the window-blind that he had entered. After a while, the light was extinguished, and I concluded that he had retired to rest. I knew that he, his father, and the Italian were heavy sleepers, as they were accustomed to indulge in deep potations at night. How it came about that Benetti had discovered and frustrated my scheme, I never was able to fathom.

Having reached that part of the premises which I judged most convenient for my attempt—a low abutment, used as a woodhouse—I lost no time in cautiously climbing on to its roof, which I was able to do very easily, as its lowest edge was not more than seven feet from the ground. Fortunately, none of the rooms in which the inmates slept looked out upon that particular angle, so that I did not much fear detection; if I could only make progress noiselessly, and attain the higher roof before daylight, I could then hide behind its high parapet. Dark as was the night, or rather morning, it was sufficiently light for me to see what I was about. Slowly and with some difficulty, I dragged myself from roof to roof till I reached a stack of chimneys that rose side by side a few feet from the parapet, and which had been bolted with an iron girdle, and fastened with thick iron rods to the wall just below it. By the aid of the rod, I managed to reach the parapet just as the dawn began to break. Here I was compelled, from sheer exhaustion, to lie down a short time and rest in the leaden gutter inside. Truly, I was but in a sorry plight—my apparel soiled from crawling in the shrubbery, and from clambering over the dirty roofs, and saturated with the blood that had flowed freely from the blow I had received. I began also to feel extremely faint from exertion, loss of blood, and excitement. What would become of me, if strength failed me? I might lie and die and rot on the summit of this old mansion, before any one discovered me. Yet not for one moment did a thought cross my mind of showing the white-feather and giving up the adventure; my feelings were indeed too overwrought for this, partly by an almost blind infatuation for the hapless Miss Wintock, and partly by that longing desire to retaliate, which, whether rightly or wrongly, is generally felt by any one who has been put hors-de-combat at an unfair advantage.

A little rest and the cool fresh morning air somewhat revived me, and I commenced creeping along the gutter. With my pocket-knife I loosened the leaden frame of a pane in one of the garret windows and extracted the glass; inserting my hand, I was able to undo the catch and obtain ingress. Finding the coast clear, I glided softly down to my room, locked myself in, bathed my head and face, and taking a pull at my flask of creature comfort, laid myself down awhile to rest my weary bones and head. I was much bruised, yet could not help inwardly chuckling at the surprise the Wintocks and their swarthy coadjutor would experience during the course of the day, when they found that, in spite of his summary ejection, Jack Meredith was once more the Man in Possession.

And great indeed was the consternation of Benetti, when, on waking about midday and feeling urgent need of refreshment, I walked down into the kitchen, where he and Martha were sitting at dinner. Neither heard me approach, as I purposely trod softly. Martha had just helped the Italian to a slice of mutton, when, slipping in, I coolly took a chair and seated myself at the table. Both of them started and stared as if I had been a ghost.

"Very fine joint of mutton, indeed, Martha—capital! and so delightfully cooked—not overdone. I should so like a taste just where it's so nicely browned on the under-side;" pointing as I spoke.—"Ah! you haven't a third plate. Never mind; I'll reach you one;" and I accordingly rose and handed her one from the dresser. The Italian muttered something in his own language, which if translated would, I suspect, have been anything but complimentary. "Extremely happy to see me at your social meal, no doubt you are, friend Benetti! I reciprocate the sentiment most warmly. Here's to your very good health"—taking up the ale-jug from the table and filling myself a glass.—"Admirable! Right good stuff"—smacking my lips.—"Pray, Martha, don't let the mutton get cold;" seeing that she had not complied with my request. "There's nothing in the world I dislike so much as cold mutton."

I could see that both were for the moment thunderstruck; and as I took up my plate and held it imploringly, Martha proceeded to cut me the coveted slice.

"Now, a couple of potatoes and a few greens, with just a dash of gravy.—Thank you, Martha. You are a good soul. I think, in future I will always take my meals with you and Benetti, instead of giving you the trouble of waiting upon me up-stairs. It will save you a great many steps, and be so much more comfortable for us all; for it's rather lonely sitting up there by one's self so much."

My companions were at first disposed to be rather glumpy; but seeing that I was determined to be on good terms with myself and them, they at last gave in, and we conversed amicably, though reservedly. I could see, however, by their occasional sly glances at my physiognomy, that both, and especially the Italian, derived considerable gratification in noting how severely I had been punished.

Acting up to my promise, I did not, during the remainder of the time I stayed at Briteleigh Hall, trouble Martha to wait upon me, having one object in view, namely, the discovery of Miss Wintock's whereabouts. I did not think it probable that she still occupied the same room above my sleeping apartment, or she would have devised some method of giving me at least a hint of it. Every night I was at my old post, the window. In vain I hummed and whistled every tune I was acquainted with. In vain I looked up to catch some slight token of her presence. I felt that she was not there. She knew her case to be desperate; and if the window were fastened, failing other means, would doubtless have shivered a pane of glass as a signal. Yet I was convinced that she was confined somewhere in the upper part of the mansion; and for the following reasons. Firstly, when I essayed to go up into the lumber-room on the following morning after I had effected my second entrance, I found the door at the top of the staircase locked, thus precluding all communication with the upper suite of apartments except by the back or servants' staircase. It was not so on the previous morning, when the inmates thought me safely shut out, as I had passed through it on getting down to my chamber. Hence there must be a motive for endeavouring to prevent me exploring them. How I wished that I had made the circuit of the roof, and peeped into every attic through its window, before descending to my own room; and yet I felt that perhaps I had acted for the best, as my strength would not have held out much longer. Secondly, I took occasion to observe that old Martha, when she thought herself unperceived, often put aside some of the best portions of her viands, as if for some other person. With these she would suddenly disappear, but always in the evening. I contrived to ascertain that she invariably made for the back staircase; and arranged my plan, desperate as it was, accordingly. It was destined to be put into execution much earlier than I had anticipated.

The fifth morning after my clamber over the roofs, Mr. Wintock sent for me into his room. As I entered, I fancied that a smile of suppressed triumph flushed his countenance. Addressing me in a grandiloquent, sneering style, he said: "Good-morning, Mr. Meredith. I am sorry that your stay at Briteleigh has been so protracted. But what cannot be helped, must be endured. I have been able to arrange my little affair with your principal, and consequently your presence here can now be dispensed with. I shall be glad if you will leave the premises at once."

Taken aback, I was at a loss for a moment or two for words to answer, as, from what I had heard previous to my coming to Briteleigh, I had not the remotest idea that Mr. Wintock would be able to liquidate the heavy demand upon him. Had Miss Wintock at last, thoroughly crushed and broken in spirit, acceded to one of his propositions, and either consented to become the bride of his son, or signed some document which gave him absolute power over her property? The thought was horrible. Yet it might be so; for as I had not been able to effect any communication with her since that unfortunate night, her energies, physical and mental, might have collapsed in despair.

Mr. Wintock, seeing that I was dumfounded, at once followed up his advantage. "I wish to make one observation before you go. You have interfered most unwarrantably and impertinently in the domestic arrangements of my family since you have been in the house, both in intruding yourself upon the privacy of a young lady resident here, and in endeavouring to facilitate her escape from her natural guardians. Possibly, you may not be aware that the young lady in question is a dangerous lunatic, and that a degree of wholesome restraint is absolutely necessary for her well-being and safety, though at times she may have apparently lucid intervals. I have no doubt you were misled by the craft peculiar to that sad affliction; hence, I am disposed to make due allowance for your extraordinary conduct. Otherwise, I should feel justified in communicating the circumstances to your employer, which would probably result in no very agreeable consequences to yourself. I may add for your satisfaction, that the young lady will shortly be placed in a suitable establishment, where she will be properly cared for. I hope, however, as you are a young man, that a due consideration of the extremely absurd manner in which you have acted, and the slight inconvenience you have suffered"—here, with a bland smile, he passed his hand significantly over the upper part of his face—"may prove a warning to you to conduct yourself more discreetly in future." He looked me full in the face and waved his hand towards the door.

How I repressed the fierce tempest of passion that inwardly shook me, I cannot tell. "Sir," I replied as calmly as I was able, "I am not in a position to doubt your word; but"——

"But what?" he angrily demanded. "I tell you, man, that I posted a cheque for the amount last evening, and that I expect a discharge and receipt by to-morrow's post. Will that satisfy you?"

"Then no doubt, sir, the same post will bring me from my principal the usual release, without which I am not justified in deserting my post. Immediately upon its arrival, I will comply with your wishes."

"You were ready enough, however, to leave it to suit your own insolent purpose!" he hotly spurted out. "But one day will not make much difference, I daresay; therefore, to-morrow be it."

I bowed, and withdrew to the kitchen, indignant, bewildered, and with a sickening sensation at the heart. I was completely foiled and beaten. "The last night I shall be here—young lady mad—confined in a madhouse—tell my employer—slight inconvenience," kept echoing through my brain, till I felt dizzy with the whirl of confused thought, and mechanically passed my hand over my face as Mr. Wintock had done. The remembrance of the indignity enraged me beyond endurance; and I determined, if human craft could accomplish it, that I would trace out Miss Wintock that very night, and ascertain from her own lips whether, when I left the house, I could do anything for her. Might not a solicitor, upon proper representation, take her case in hand, and forcibly obtain the release of her person from the fiends who now held her in confinement? Doubtless, much energy and skill would be required; but the strong arm of the law was, or ought to be, all-powerful. Yes! I would see her. Old Wintock might storm and rave as he liked. I should bid him farewell on the morrow: and if he tried to injure me with my employer, I hoped my statement would be believed; and if not—supposing I got my discharge and was thrown out of work—the world was wide, and I should be a kind of martyr in a good cause—the cause of beauty in distress.

Putting a good face on matters, I told old Martha and Benetti that I was to depart on the morrow, as Mr. Wintock had settled all claims upon him. It was evident by the covert smile on the face of each that the intelligence gave them great satisfaction. In the course of the evening, I sauntered out of the kitchen as if to go to my room; and no doubt, as I bade them good-evening, they concluded that I had retired for the night. Instead of doing so, I quietly slipped up the back staircase. Here, as in the other, there was a door at the top, which shut the upper range of apartments from the lower. The staircase itself, however, was much darker. This door was also locked, confirming my suspicion that Miss Wintock was above-stairs. As is often the case in ancient mansions, there were several nooks and recesses in this old circular staircase. Within one of these, on the landing, I ensconced myself and waited patiently. I did not much fear discovery, as old Martha's sight was none of the quickest, and she usually wore a bonnet and shawl of an evening, as she suffered somewhat from rheumatism. At length I saw her coming, hobbling slowly up the stairs, and bearing a lighted candle and a covered dish.

"All right, Jack, my boy; you're on the right scent," said I to myself. "Lie close!"

And close I did lie as ever weasel in a hole. Old Martha reached the landing, put down her dish and candle, drew the key from her pocket, and proceeded to unlock the door. Then entering with her burden—which she again put down for a minute inside—was about to relock it, when I emerged from my hiding-place and stepped in also, shutting the door after me. The old dame turned deadly pale and would have screamed, but my hand was on her mouth. I learned that trick from Benetti the night Miss Wintock was forcibly carried back from my room.

"Now, my dear soul, don't make a riot, because there's no need for it. I mean you no harm, and wouldn't hurt a hair of your old gray head for the world. I only want a little private conversation with you.—There, now"—taking the key from her trembling hand, and transferring it to my pocket, after locking the door—"we can have it all quietly to ourselves without fear of interruption.—It's no use, Martha," I added sternly, seeing that she was about to remonstrate. "It's my turn for a little while now. What is the use of your calling out? No one can possibly hear you."

Martha's teeth chattered and her knees trembled. "What is it you want with me, man?" she asked.

"Now, be civil, old lady. No 'manning,' if you please. Just take up the dish and candle, and I will bear you company. I want a few minutes' speech with your young lady."

"I cannot! I dare not! Mr. Wintock would kill me."

"Stuff! He'll do nothing of the kind. Besides, he is not obliged to know anything about it, unless you are silly enough to inform him."

Old Martha bent as if to pick up the dish and candle. There was a slight noise below. Possible Benetti had returned for a moment into the house for something. In an instant her mouth was at the keyhole; she was about to shriek for assistance; but I was too quick for her.

"You treacherous old beldam," I whispered, "if you try that dodge again, I'll gag you.—Now, just listen to me. I know all about the rascally doings in this house. I know that Miss Wintock is forcibly confined somewhere in one of these attics. She is no more insane than I am; so that tale will not serve Mr. Wintock's purpose. To-morrow, I'm off to London; and I'll move earth, sea, and sky, till I set the authorities on the right track to find and release her. I know Mr. Wintock's motive—her property. He won't have a feather of it to fly with; he is more likely to land in jail. You shall come in for your share of punishment in illegally confining her. Let me see her for a few moments, and I promise you, on the word of a man, that whatever transpires, you shall be held free from blame."

After some further expostulation on her part, and renewed threats and promises on mine, Martha took her dish and candle and proceeded to Miss Wintock's apartment. I kept close to her, eyeing keenly every movement; for I felt that if only half a chance occurred, she would play me false.

Never shall I forget the sight that presented itself on my entering Miss Wintock's wretched garret. Stretched on a miserably narrow pallet lay the beautiful but haggard girl, dressed as I last saw her, but with a stout leathern girdle belt tightly round her waist, and which, fastened with a thick strong cord passing round one of the bedposts, effectually prevented her from moving except within a very limited area. The casement was strongly barred on the inside, and the catch securely fastened. In this remote room, at the very top of the house, there was not the slightest opportunity of communicating with the world without.

Old Martha noticed the start I gave on first entering the room, and commenced a hypocritical whimpering. "Indeed, Mr. Meredith, it's no fault of mine, nor could I help it. 'Tis all master's doing and Mr. George's, and I am too old and too feeble to do anything but obey orders."

"Silence, woman!" I sternly retorted, as I thrust her into the only chair in the room, and advanced to the side of the poor suffering and ill-used young lady.

The death-like pallor of her countenance, the drooping of the long dark eyelashes, and the listless rolling of the languid eyes, evinced the intense mental anguish that racked her. The instant her eyes rested on me, a sharp faint cry of joyful recognition escaped her, and she stretched out her hand. In the tumult of my distracted feelings, I seized it and pressed it warmly to my lips. A deep flush came rushing into her neck and face until she crimsoned to the temples. The next instant she was, if possible, even paler than before, and her short, rapid breathing told of the excitement under which she labored.

"O Mr. Meredith—I was afraid that—I thought—I hoped you would not desert me," she gasped.

"Not while I have life, dear Miss Wintock," was the prompt reply. While I spoke, my pocket-knife was out, and I was sawing like a maniac at the cord to sever it.

Old Martha began to wring her hands and to remonstrate, but her remonstrances I speedily checked.

The cord was speedily cut through; and gently raising Miss Wintock to a sitting posture, I asked: "Are you able to stand?"

"Yes; thank you very, very much. At least I'll try. She gave me one glance of appealing trustfulness, and burst into a passionate fit of weeping. "Oh, take me away with you from this horrid place! I shall go really mad; I know I shall; I am so now, almost. O my poor brain!"

I tried my utmost to soothe her. Even old Martha aided me. Perhaps her womanly feeling was touched; for I believe she was more the unlucky victim and tool of circumstances than of an intrinsically bad and hardened nature. She produced her old-fashioned smelling-bottle, bathed Miss Wintock's hands and face, and induced her to eat some of the food she had brought; and I persuaded her, with some difficulty, to take a sip or two from my spirit flask, which I had previously put in my pocket in case of emergency.

At length the young lady became calmer. But I saw that it would be necessary to use extreme caution, or she would suffer a relapse, as she continued to entreat me, in the most pathetic language, not to leave her again in the power of the Wintocks. I looked at my watch; it wanted about twenty minutes to nine. Precisely at nine, in readiness for the evening ride, Mr. Wintock's gig and mare would be in the yard near the side-door, and Mr. George's horse shortly afterwards. Mr. Wintock would probably, as he often did, keep his gig waiting for him till a quarter past. George Wintock would be off shortly afterwards. Though I had spoken so confidently to Martha, I was not at all sure that some unlucky accident might not intervene if I remained where I was. Benetti might miss Martha. In fact, I was terrible uneasy and in a sad dilemma. Stay where I was for any length of time, I dared not. Leave Miss Wintock in her present state of mind, I could not. Indeed, I think she would have attempted to follow her way with me, had I shown any indication of leaving her. A hasty and perhaps rash resolve took possession of me. If I could only get Miss Wintock below and conceal her till after the departure of the Wintocks, we might succeed in getting away unseen down to the village, where I hoped to house her safely and obtain assistance in protecting her; for surely none who knew her would refuse to aid; and even if discovered, I should then only have the Italian to deal with. Our time had been singularly ill-chosen before. We had waited till both Mr. Wintock and his son had returned home before making our attempt.

I again bent over Miss Wintock, and asked: "Do you think you could walk a little?"—at the same time giving her a meaning look.

The rapid glance of intelligence with which she replied reassured me.

Omnibus Drivers in London.

The life of an omnibus driver is somewhat hard. Every one sees him plodding along on his unobstructed course in Piccadilly or Oxford street, but few realize the great distances over which he travels. Here, for instance, are the salient facts in regard to a particular instance with which I lately became acquainted. It appears that 11 horses are needed for the omnibus in question; of these 8 go out every day. The course of the vehicle is 15 miles, 7½ in to the city and of course the same distance back to the stables in one of the suburbs. This journey is performed 4 times in each day, making a daily journey of 60 miles for the vehicle and driver, and of 15 miles for each horse on 8 days out of every 11. Though, however, the horse gets on the average 3 days in the stable out of every 11, the driver gets no respite at all. He drives his 60 miles a day, Sundays not excepted, which is equivalent to 420 miles a week, or 21,840 miles per annum. For this he gets 6s. per diem, paid daily. He is subject to a notice of 24 hours. He is liable for one-third of the cost of any damage from accident. He has to provide his own personal equipment, including top-coat, gloves and driving whips, the gloves especially being a surprisingly large item of expense. A whip costs 7s. 6d., and it is extraordinary how soon the handle wears through when it is held for 10 hours per day. So much for the duties of the situation. The consolations are the society of the various passengers and the study of the temperament and peculiarities of the 11 horses who share the driver's toils. These have all their names and histories; the names being mostly comic, their histories sometimes tragic enough. On the whole they are well treated, and with steady, easy driving often do their work for years together without a day's illness. The companies might do well if they provided for their drivers having one week's holiday per year, and if they could supply them with a uniform top coat, or whip, or pair of gloves, after certain sufficient terms of service to warrant the expenditure, the effect upon the men would be good. The 24 hours' notice seems also short for men in positions so important. On the other hand, the pay is good, and it is satisfactory to think that whenever we behold an omnibus driver we behold an individual who is probably in the receipt of more than £100 a year.

Shadowed by a Woman.

Major John R. Throckmorton was buried in the family vault at Louisville the other day. He died some time ago in a lonely hut on a Mississippi plantation. His last moments were haunted by the thought that Ellen Goodwin was still shadowing him. For 25 years the woman followed him, and was known in Louisville as Throckmorton's ghost. The reason for this was never known. It was the popular belief that Throckmorton had wronged her in her youth. In storm and sunshine, at home and abroad, the silent figure in black hovered about him and blighted his life. She died some years ago, and ordered the history of her heart secret buried with her.—Atlanta (Ga.) Journal.

Painted Diamonds.

BY H. C. HOVEY.

The latest fraud in precious stones furnishes a curious confirmation of the law of chromatic contrasts, and an unexpected illustration of Shakespeare's saying:

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily.

About six months ago the owner of a magnificent gem, which he had supposed to be a Brazilian diamond of the first water, suddenly found it reduced to about one-fifth its value by being accidentally washed with soap-suds. This simple process revealed its true character as a yellow diamond of inferior grade. This diamond, which was originally played in Paris, has since been reproduced in this country, and it is rumored that a single firm on Chestnut Street was thus swindled out of thousands of dollars without being able to detect the perpetrator of the fraud.

A case of the sort is now in the New York courts being tried by Judge Deming, some of the particulars of which may be of interest, and served to put persons on their guard against what is really an ingenious deception.

Jacob Nepel, a manufacturing jeweler of that city, had several diamonds, apparently of great value, which he disposed of through agent to Mr. Edward Engel, a dealer and broker of seventeen years' experience. The gems were faultless, but the low price placed on them awoke suspicion that they were either stolen or spurious. Several diamond dealers examined them, using a microscope for the purpose, and pronounced them old mine diamonds and worth five times their price. Mr. Engel then took them to New York and exhibited them to Messrs. Heller & Barber, importers and dealers in precious stones, who were also deceived by the appearance of the gems until the owner mentioned his suspicions. Mr. Heller, remembering to have heard of a new process of painting diamonds, took one of the studs, estimated to be worth from $1,000 to $1,500, washed it in soapsuds, and found it to be a cheap African diamond worth perhaps $140. The rest of the gems proved to have been tampered with in a similar manner. On returning to New Haven, Mr. Engel sought redress through the courts, and probably will get it.

The explanation is as follows: The common African diamonds are naturally a pale yellow. On dipping one of them for a few minutes in an aqueous solution of aniline violet, and then letting it dry, it will be found that, while the lustre remains unimpaired, the color is changed from yellow to the fine steel-blue usually observable in the best stones. The two colors, yellow and violet, it will be noticed, are complementaries, and on blending produce a brilliant result described. The aniline is easily removed by the application of soap suds, the water being tinged, not violet, but green, while the diamond regains its original yellow hue.—Scientific American.

A Japanese Wedding.

On Monday last the marriage of Mr. Inouye and Mr. Katsunosuke Inouye was celebrated at the official residence of his excellency Inouye, minister for Foreign Affairs. The ceremony was conducted in Japanese fashion, and attended only by the near relatives and intimate friends of the families. The wedding presents were displayed in the up-stairs room, and of course attracted much attention. With a few exceptions the Japanese gifts, though costly and attractive, were intended to express a sentiment rather than serve any useful purpose. Most prominent was a mountain formed of rolls of silk white and crimson. Each roll was tied with strands of parti colored twine, tied not brought round into a bow as is usual, but tied in hard knots, emblematical of the indissolubility of the marriage tie. The silk was intended to typify gentleness during constancy, the strength of the cord offering a noted contrast to their softness and flexibility. Round the base of this mountain were deposited a number of ornaments of fresh rice straw, plaited into the forms of storks and tortoises, of longevity, or the bamboo, and plum, of perpetual bloom, and into the loops of the plaits were thrust pieces of dried bonito, a favorite accompaniment at wedding presents, its name (katsu-woo) being a homonyme for the three Chinese characters signifying victorious, manly, brave.—Japan Weekly Mail.

What is Work?

I may perhaps be allowed to put the following question, What is Work? The usual reply is, "Any pursuit by which a man gains or attempts to earn a livelihood and to accumulate wealth." This definition is more widely regretted because it cherishes, or rather begets, the vulgar error that all persons who do not aim at the accumulation of wealth are "idlers." In point of fact such men may be doing far greater services to the world than the most diligent and successful votary of trade or profession. Darwin having a competency, was therewith content. To him, and to others of kindred minds, the opportunity of devoting his whole life to the search after scientific truth was a boon immeasurably higher than any conceivable amount of wealth. Shall we call him an idler? Nay, science the only field which opens splendid prospects to men of independent means. Art, literature, philanthropy, have all their departments, unremunerative in a commercial point of view, or at least not directly remunerative, and for all these cultivators are wanted. Therefore, reversing the advice given by routine moralists, I would say to wealthy young men of ability: "Do not take up any trade, business, or profession, but devote some of the world's unpaid work. Let money-making to those who have no other option, and be searchers for truth and beauty. Every one who follows this advice will contribute something to show the world that the race for wealth is not the only pursuit worthy of a rational being. I should define work as the conscious systematic application of mind or body to any definite purpose.

Ravages of the Spruce Tree Worm.

The ravages of some insects on the spruce trees in northern Maine, says the Bangor Commercial, is becoming a serious matter to the owners of timber lands. A gentleman who is well acquainted with the wooded tracts in the vicinity of Rangely says that if the work of devastation goes on five years more as it has for five years past, it will destroy all the spruce trees in that section. The larva which state the insect does the mischief, is a green worm about an inch long.

A Story with a Great Deal of Life in it

The departments were just beginning to disgorge the great slices of humanity that they had swallowed in the morning. I was standing by one of the great piles as the men and women began to come out slowly at the first. The first two or three, warned by experience, had umbrellas, under which they went jogging slowly home at a clerkly gait. The fourth was a woman in widow's clothing—rather shabby clothing which had been worn a long time. She was thin, shrunken, gray and pale, and seemed broken with a weight of bad years—a sad memory of better days. The carriage of the Secretary was rolling to and fro before the big entrance of the building. His gray-whiskered coachman with difficulty restrained his blooded horses. The Secretary was signing his name a great many times on a great many different documents in his lofty, velvety office. He might be out in a minute. He might not be out for an hour. Just as the ghostly widow came slowly down the big steps the fine old coachman turned his prancing pair toward the entrance. The poor old gentlewoman came down to the sidewalk with an evident difficulty, which spoke of rheumatism. She was perplexed and puzzled by the unexpected rain storm. She had no umbrella, and I don't believe she had car fare. The black angel on the Secretary's carriage spied her as she stood in the pouring rain, and recognized under all time's disguises the features her fashionable friends had not seen for years. It's wonderful what sharp eyes these good old colored "uncles" and "mommies" have. He drove up to the curb at once and leaning over on his perch invited the poor puzzled woman to get in the Secretary's carriage and ride home. Without a thought of the consequences to the faithful old fool on the box she murmured her address, fortunately near at hand, and sank back luxuriously on the soft cushions of the handsome carriage. Taking all the risks, the fine old fellow drove carefully yet quickly to the shabby boarding house, and was back long before the Secretary was ready for him. I would never have known, had the loyal old servant not told me, that the widow's husband was a general who was famous when the Secretary was unknown, although I could have been quite sure that old Thomas drove her carriage when she had one.

A Basket Testifies in Court.

Jacob Beyer was arrested in New York at the instance of Robert Strauss, for stealing a parrot valued at $250. The case came before Justice Kiehl. It was agreed that the bird should be placed on the witness-stand and testify as to which party it belonged to, the court holding that there were no rules of evidence preventing it. There was a large crowd in the room, and the novel proceedings caused much amusement. The parrot, which is of the great macaw species, is a beautiful bird, with green, blue and orange plumage, its wings being almost black. It was taken out of its cage and placed on the iron railing in front of the Judge. 'Wie gehts?" asked Judge Kiehl of the witness in German. The bird made no reply, but looked solemn. The Judge then tried English, and asked:

"What is your name?"

"Cheese it, you gray-headed old spalpeen!" shouted the parrot in reply. The Judge grew red in the face and the spectators laughed.

"You impudent thing. If you address me in that manner I will fine you for contempt," said the court.

"Oh, give us a rest, will you?" piped the bird. One of the attorneys gave the parrot a pretzel, which it ate with great relish, and when it was again asked for its name it replied:

"Polly Strauss, Polly Brach, O——!" finishing the sentence with a tremendous oath, which greatly shocked the court and lawyers. Some one in the rear end of the room shouted:

"Does Polly want a drink?"

Thereupon Polly flapped her wings and flew out of the court room. The case was concluded owing to the absence of the witness.

Barnum is a great temperance reformer and lecturer, but one of his greatest reforms he has said very little about. Perhaps it speaks, or rather keeps silence, for itself. He said to a Philadelphia reporter: "people go to a circus to see, not to hear, and none of our clowns attempt to talk. We allowed them to talk for a day or two, but the tent is so large that not one-third of those present heard what they said, and I guess they didn't lose much. I haven't a great opinion of talking clowns, and to prove that their acts are not now so effective as pantomimes we dressed up a man as a 'dude' in New York the other night and sent him in to idle about the rings. He didn't have a word to say, but his appearance and pantomime took the audience by storm and he made the hit of the week."

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

BRIGGS' GENUINE ELECTRIC OIL.

Electricity feeds the brain and muscles; in a word, it is Nature's food,

The Electric Oil possesses all the qualities that it is possible to combine in a medicine, thereby giving it a wide range of application as an internal remedy for man and beast. The happiest results follow its use and in Nervous Diseases, such as Rheumatism, Neuralgia and kindred diseases, it has no equal.

For Throat and Lung Diseases, Bowel Complaints, Etc.,

It is truly a marvel. The Oil, besides exciting appetite, promoting digestion and checking fermentation on the stomach, antidotes or counteracts the effect of uric acid, which produces rheumatism by destroying the oxolate and phosphate of lime in the bones, and the membranes inclosing the joints.

Price 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists. (Eclectric is not Electric.)

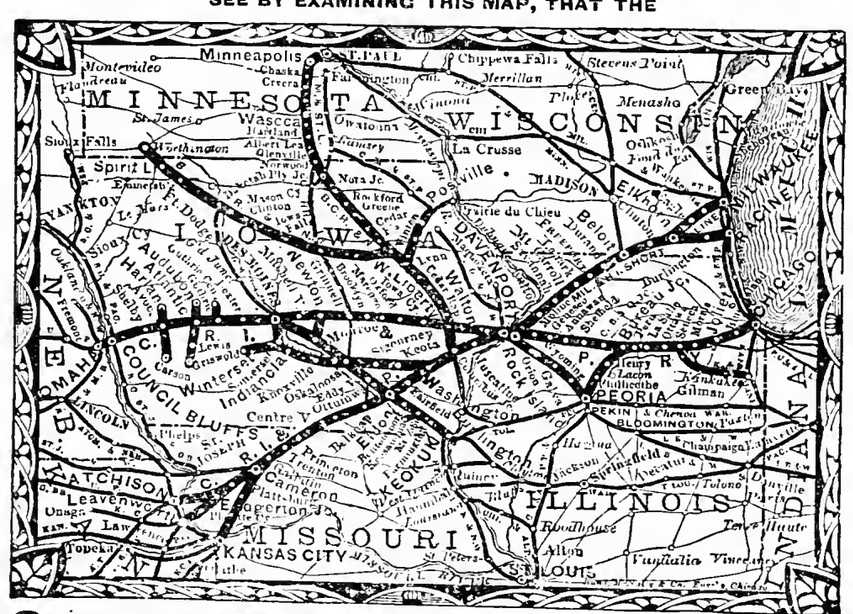
Takes much pleasure in returning thanks to his numerous customers for their hearty support in the past, and hopes by still further studying their interest and comfort to acquire a still greater amount of patronage.

The constantly increasing demand for good stylish fitting garments is a great proof of the advancing taste of our young men and their ambition to keep pace with the times.



The latest styles always on hand, and while I would prefer making my garments always in the prevailing style, yet my customers who choose to have them otherwise, my depend on getting them just to their orders.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Calliatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Marie. The steamer Magnet, Capt. McLeod; and Spartan, Capt. McGregor, are iron side wheel vessel, and both well known to the travelling public, as firstrate passenger boats. These boats will run in connection with the Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway, leaving Owen Sound on the arrival of the evening train from Toronto. The Magnet and Spartan will make connection with the Canada Pacific Railway at the landing, whence their passengers and freight will go forward to Winnipeg and points west. The Africa is the third boat of the line, commanded by Capt. La France, and her route will be from Owen Sound to Georgian Bay ports and to Sault Ste. Marie.

ESPECIALLY FOR LADIES.

The Fiancee as a Wallflower.—A Millionaire Ballet Dancer.—How She Won Him.—Chit-Chat.

The Engaged Girl.

Engaged young ladies (says the New York Journal) are the prescribed wall-flowers of society. The vast majority of them are pretty, or they would not be engaged, but how many of them wear out their beauty in the vain hope that engagement will mean marriage, and that marriage will mean happiness. Every girl who goes to balls and parties, to the opera and race meetings, to Saratoga, or on one of the fashionable steamers to Europe, can tell you that should one of these doomed ones attract the attention of the other sex sufficiently to provoke an inquiry as to her name and station it is enough to kill all interest in her to answer:—"That's Miss So-and-so. She's engaged!" As for the engaged one, if she be a faithful sweetheart, she is bound to consider herself as somebody labeled and ticketed, and laid by for future use. Knowing the irrational jealousy of man, she devotes all her thoughts to appearing above the suspicion of flirtation—or even above the suspicion of taking the remotest interest in any male human being other than he who has laid a first and second mortgage on her, and may be flourishing a free foot and a fellow to it at the very moment she is pining in the metaphorical but tangible weed of widowhood. If she be, on the other hand, what is termed a "lively" girl, and can not understand why a young lady who is engaged should make a sort of social mummy of herself, and mixes innocently, but joyously, in the ordinary pleasures of girls of her age, she is open to the basest misconstruction of her own sex—and will surely incur it. There is not a society girl who reads these lines who can not call to mind an instance in her own circle of acquaintance where the conduct of a fellow female of her coterie—innocent enough in itself—has not been stigmatized by persons of her own age and sex as "outrageous," simply because she had the misfortune to be "engaged."

Even a wife is more free from espionage than an engaged girl. The wife, at all events, has the fact to fall back upon that she has a husband. He is supposed to be, and in the vast majority of cases is, the best judge of what his wife ought to do and say, and where she ought to go, and with whom, whether he is along or not. Any person, therefore, who runs the risk of offending the wife, makes a certainty of offending the husband, and it is this fact which makes the society and the conversation and even the presence of young married women so delightful in American social life. With the engaged girl, who is tied up equally as tight domestically, and infinitely more so socially, the case is very different. The mere fact she is engaged brings down on her an arrow from every female belt. She is, and she knows she is, the target for the very sharpest weapons of female archery. If wounded, she has no husband to fall back upon; and her instinct teaches her that the arrow which has pierced her own breast would doubly rankle in the breast of her lover if she were to call upon him to pull it out. Her only safety is in the belief that it is not there. He, in the meantime, secure of the prize which he has set aside pretty much as he sets aside a box of collars—to utilize when in his judgment the proper time has come—is pretty much of a privileged character in social life. Fifth avenue and Morray hill can furnish forth any day of the week a hundred such. There is no restraint placed upon him in society. He is just as welcome to balls and parties, and to lead the german, while he is merely engaged, as he would be if he had just left the paternal nest. Far sighted mothers, who know from experience that six out of ten engagements never come to anything, do not frown upon their daughters, who, not being themselves engaged, take a delighted pleasure in showing themselves off to their best advantage before him, a pursuit in which they are greatly abetted by the knowledge or report that some other woman has had the impudence to get a lien upon him.

A Genuine Attraction.

Miss Carrie Astor, daughter of William B. Astor, heiress expectant to millions upon millions, pet in our most exquisite society (says a New York letter), has become a ballet-dancer. Her debut was in the presence of a jammed crowd af eager spectators. The dance was a Dutch reel, elaborated by new and picturesque movements. Miss Astor wore a correct Dutch peasant costume, consisting of a red merino skirt and a white muslin waist; her hair was braided behind and branded with an ornamental gold device, while her cap, modelled after those worn by the girls of the province of Friesland, was prettily coquettish. She had heavy gold bracelets, a gold linked-chain necklace, a diamond brooch and diamond ear-rings. She danced gracefully, to the music of zithers, and was applauded with immense enthusiasm. No performance by the expert Cavallazzi, the ballet premier of grand opera at the Academy of Music, ever gained half the approbation. Of course, Miss Astor didn't do this on the stage, though it was part of a show at which a dollar admission fee was charged. This happened at the Kirmesse, or Dutch, festival given for a charitable object. If Manager Palmer, of the Union Square theatre, could secure such attractive actresses he wouldn't look in vain for recruits to take the place of seceders from his company, and finally retire from the business in despair, as he has this week done.

Mlle. De Prago's Choice.

As the controversy has often been waged as to whether it is competent for a lady to propose marriage, an interesting example may be quoted, the heroine being no other than the wife of M. de Lesseps. This distinguished lady was at La Chesnave when all Europe was astir about the achievements of the Suez enterprise. One day in the garden she saw De Lesseps walking on a terrace. She plucked a rose, and, going up to him, begged of him, for her sake, to wear it at dinner. He asked her if she did not mean it for his son. No; it was for himself. De Lesseps explained to her that he was on the wrong side of sixty, while she was not yet nineteen. That did not matter; what his age was had never occurred to her. She had only thought of his grandness and his goodness. How was it possible for a man reared on the sunny side of a Pyrenean mountain to reason down the feelings this confession aroused? Time was given to Mlle. de Prago to reflect, and she was given to understand that no friendship would be lost were she to change her mind after the bans had been published. The marriage, however, was celebrated contemporaneously with the Suez fetes.

Chit-Chat.

The philosoper who said "figures never lie" did not know much about ballet girls.

The blushing cheek of maidenhood grows brighter as it grows older, but the brightness is often dne to rouge.

When a pair of eloping lovers get married on board a train, as has been done, the affair might properly be spoken of as a "car-coupling."

"I want to get a warrant," said a colored woman indignantly, the other day, to Col. Saltmarsh. "What for?" "She called me out of my name."

"I would like scalloped oysters," she remarked. He answered, meaning to be funny: "I don't know how to scallop oysters." "Then bias some," said she.

"Are you any relation to my sister?" He blushed and stammered until the young lady, taking pity on him, solved the matter by saying: "No, but he'd like to be—wouldn't you, Alfred?"

A Georgia maiden thus acknowledges the receipt of a bouquet: Oh! the permeating aroma of that altogether too lovely exuberance of nature inflated my afflatus and kindled in my soul a passion that time can not obliterate!

"You made a little mistake in your announcement yesterday, sir." "Very likely. It is almost impossible not to make a mistake sometimes. What was it?" "You said me and Lizzie Perkins were bothered, when we were not bothered at all. We are betrothed, sir."

"Ladies' handkerchiefs are embroidered with mottoes suitable for the mood of the day, such as: "I am cross, don't speak to me;" "What a lovely day;" "I don't care for company," etc. The men will follow suit with such emblems as "I will pay you next week;" "Don't care if I do;" "Damfino;" "Lend me a quarter;" "See you later," etc.

A new baby recently arrived in the family of a Louisville journalist, and papa was excessively proud over the event. Turning to the old black nurse, "Aunty," said he, stroking the little pate, "this boy seems to have a journalistic head." "Oh," cried the untutored old Aunty, soothingly, "never you mind 'bout dat; dat'll come all right in time."

Committee of Solicitation—"Is Mrs. Smith at home?" Mary Ann (lately landed)—"No, ma'am." Second lady of Committee—"How unfortunate! We wanted to see her on business. Please tell her so when you hand her these cards." Third lady—"Have you any idea when she will be in?' Mary Ann (who has been drilled for formalities only)—"Yes, ma'am; she said when she ran out on the piazza as how she'd come right in again as soon as she heard the door shut."

"Now, children," said Mrs. Shoddy, as she finished staining their lips and chins with rouge; "now, children, after you are out a little while you must ring Mrs. Envious' bell and pretend you've called to play with her little daughter. If she asks you what made the red stains on your face, tell her you had strawberries for dinner. There," she muttered, when the children were out of sight, "there, I guess she'll be blind with envy when she thinks I have been able to buy strawberries at 40 cents a pint."

Young Smith called on Miss Higgenbottom a few nights ago, and got very wet on his way to the young lady's residence. After he arrived nothing would do but she must make a fire for him, and in spite of his protestations she soon had a roaring fire started. Drawing near it, Mr. Smith poised one foot on the other in front of the blaze. For some moments not a word was spoken. Presently the young lady gently remarked: "Mr. Smith, please take down the blower: I think the fire has a good start." Down came the feet amid smiles from the girl.

—A story is told of a popular English comedian finding himself one day umbrellaless and cabless in a furious rain storm in London. He accosted a wayfarer enjoying an expansive umbrella with a cordial, "Why, how do you do?" as he slipped under the eaves of the grateful shelter. "I am so glad to see you," he continued, hooking his arm into his neighbor's; "I wanted to tell you how Miss —— of the Gaiety raves about you," and so he rattled on until he reached the hotel, whither he was bound, when, looking his benefactor in the face, he exclaimed: "Why, by Jove, what have I done? I thought you were ——!! A thousand pardons." He told the story amid much laughter in the hotel, and at its conclusion a critical friend remarked that the comedian's scarf was in some disorder. The fact that a valuable diamond and pearl pin was missing became painfully associated in his mind with that man with the umbrella, though how the thing was done, if it had been done by him, he could not say.

He Admitted That There Was No Place Like Home.

"You seem in a bad fix," said a philanthropist to a man sitting on the curbstone looking much depressed in spirits.

"Not so awful bad as I might be," was the reply.

"Have you no home?"

"Oh, yes, I've got one."

"Why don't you go there, then?"

"Because I don't want to."

"But you should, for the poet says, 'be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.'"

"And right the poet was, too, I was at home not an hour ago, and the house was turned upside down, all the beds out of the window, and the furniture in the corners, and my wife with a dish rag around her head, and the children so dusty you couldn't clean 'em with a feather brush, and the hired girls raising Sam Hill, and four niggars beating carpets, and the paper hangers at work, and a window cleaner with a hose turned on, and no dinner and no prospects of any, and the duce to pay generally—oh, you and the poet are shoutin', and you're mighty right too, there's no place like home."

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES.

Some Toothsome Summer Dishes.

Eggs and Beet Root.—Take some slices of dressed beet-root; toss them in some fresh olive oil made perfectly hot; arrange them in a dish; place some poached and trimmed eggs in a circle round the beet-root; add pepper; squeeze lemon juice over, and serve directly.

Green Pea Soup.—Cut up a small chicken, or take a few slices of ham, and boil until the meat is entirely done. Remove the chicken or meat, and throw into the liquor a quart of shelled peas, some pepper and salt. Boil until entirely done, and then thicken the soup, when you may add another pint of peas boiled in a different vessel, and a lump of butter the size of a goose egg.

Conserve of Strawberries.—Prepare the fruit as for preserving, allowing half a pound of loaf sugar to one pound of fruit. sprinkle the sugar over the fruit at night, in the morning put on the fire in a kettle, and boil until the berries are clear. Spread on dishes, and put in the sun until dry; after which roll in sugar and preserve in jars.

Raspberry Jam.—To every quart of ripe raspberries allow a pound of best loaf sugar; put sugar and berries into a pan, and let them stand two or three hours; then boil them in a porcelain kettle, taking off the scum carefully; when no more scum rises mash them and boil them to a smooth marmalade; when cold put in tumblers. Blackberry and strawberry jam can be made in the same way.

Preserved Cherries.—Pick and stone the cherries; put them in layers with powdered sugar, in a deep earthern dish, allowing half a pound of sugar to each pound of cherries; let them stand in a cool place three days; then boil altogether in a copper preserving kettle, drawing the kettle from the fire, or stirring it down every time it boils, until it has boiled up six times; then pour all into an earthern dish and let them cool; when cool take up the cherries from the syrup; drain them; lay them in thin layers, on hair sieves in a warm oven, to dry; turn them out on clean sieves every six hours until they are quite dry; they may then be packed in boxes between layers of paper.

Beef Tongue Salad.—Boil one smoked beef tongue until thoroughly done, when cold grate it very fine. Then take the yolks of four hard-boiled eggs, mashed fine, add two tablespoonsful of fine olive oil to the eggs, beat in well; then a dessertspoonful of fine made mustard mixed, half a teaspoonful of salt; pepper to taste and about a quarter of a pint of good vinegar; beat the dressing well; when the salad is wanted, mix the dressing with the beef tongue. This makes a nice sandwich. Chicken salad and oyster salad may be made the same way, adding celery to the former.

Potato Salad.—Cut ten or twelve boiled potatoes into slices from a quarter to half an inch thick, put into a salad bowl with four tablespoonsful of tarragon or plain vinegar, six tablespoonsful of best salad oil, one teaspoonful of minced parsley, and pepper and salt to taste; stir well, that all be thoroughly mixed. It should be made two or three hours before needed on the table. Anchovies, olives, or any pickles may be added to this salad, as also bits of cold beef, chicken or turkey if desired. But it is excellent without these.

Mushroom Catsup.—Cut off the stubs from the broad flat mushrooms; peel and break them into small bits; strew salt equally over them, allowing a large tablespoonful to every quart of the pulp. Let them stand twenty-four hours; put all into a saucepan and let it boil gently for three quarters of an hour; strain and let it stand to settle over night. Next day pour off the clear part, and to every pint of liquor add a few blades of mace, twelve black pepper corns, and the same of allspice, a piece of bruised ginger and eight cloves. Simmer it twenty minutes, and when cold bottle it, with the spices equally divided.

Pickled Beet Root.—Wash the beet perfectly, not cutting any of the fiberous roots, lest the juice escape; put in sufficient water to boil it, and when the skin will come off easily it is sufficiently cooked, and may be taken out and laid upon a cloth to cool. Having rubbed off the peel, cut the beet into thick slices, pour over it cold vinegar prepared as follows: Boil a quart of vinegar with an ounce of whole black pepper, and an equal weight of dry ginger, and let it stand until quite cold. Keep closely corked.

Eccentric Suicides.

Because his mother lent his horse to his brother against his will, Henan Hegley, aged 22, of Millersville, Ohio, took a fatal dose of morphine.

R. F. Gibbs, once a circus clown, of Fort Worth, Tex. killed himself by swallowing a decotion of laudanum, arsenic, morphine, and sulphate of zinc.

The family of Peter R. Selover, an old farmer of Owasco, N.Y., persuaded him to leave the farm and move to town. He became so homesick that he hanged himself.

Solon Engel, of Tangipahoa, La., made his will, staked off ground where he wished to be buried in his garden, carried a box to the place, seated himself upon it, put the muzzle of a gun in his mouth, and pushing the trigger with the ramrod, was instantly killed.

After John Anthes, of Delaven, Ill., had loaded his effects upon a car prior to moving his family to Dakota, the contents of the car were seized on an attachment for debt, when Anthes whipped out a pistol shot himself dead. He was 40 years of age, and had a wife and five small children.

The Value of a Goldsmith's Shop.

A pine floor laid in a gold worker's shop in ten years become worth $150 per foot. A Syracuse jeweller once bought for less than $50 some sweepings that gave $208 worth of gold. A tub in his cellar, into which is blown the dust from a polishing lathe, accumulates $50 a year. A workman in his shop carried off on the tip of his moistened finger $30 of filings in a few weeks. Workmen sometimes oil their hair and then run their fingers through it, leaving a deposit of gold particles, which they afterward wash out.

A GREAT REVELATION.

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered by Dr. Selwyn Stanley Before the Metropolitan Scientific Association of London.

"The free and independent thought of this age accepts statements only where they are proven to be truth, while the developments of mental power seem equally great in every other department of life. The valuable inventions of the day are counted by thousands. The increase of scientific study is universal. The spirit of inquiry in all fields is so marked as to cause comment on every side, while people seem investigating and advancing in every direction which can help them morally, mentally or physically. This is specially true of the human body and everything which concerns it, and the truths which the people have found, even in the last fifty years, are simply marvellous. How really ignorant some cultured and supposeably scientific people were only a few years, ago as compared with the present day, may be better understood from a few

ILLUSTRATIVE FACTS.

"A prominent American writer prepared an elaborate essay to prove that steamships could never cross the Atlantic, and his pamphlet was issued just in time to be carried by the first steamer that came to England. People once believed that the heart was the seat of life and health. It is now known that this organ is only a pump, simply keeping in motion what other and more important organs of the body have created and transformed. It was once supposed that if a person felt a pain in the back, the liver was deranged; if a pain came in the lower chest the lungs were affected and consumption was near; it is now known that a pain in the back indicates diseased kidneys, while troubles in the lower chest arise from a disordered liver and not imperfect lungs. A severe pain in the head was once thought to come from some partial derangement of the brain; it is now known that troubles in other parts of the body and away from the head, cause headaches and that only by removing the cause can the pain be cured. It is a matter of that General Washington was bled to death. His last illness was slight and caused principally by weariness. A physcian was called who bled him copiously. Strange to say, the patient became no better! Another doctor was called, who again took away a large amount of the vital fluid. Thus in succession four physicians drew away the life of a great man who was intended by nature for an old age, and who prematurely died—murdered by malpractice—bled to death. That was the age of medical bleeding!"

The speaker then graphically described another period which came upon the people, in which they assigned the origin of all diseases to the stomach and after showing the falsity of this theory, and that the kidneys and liver were the causes of disease, and that many people are suffering from kidney and liver troubles to-day who do not know it, but who should know it and attend to them at once, continued:

"Let us look at this matter in a little more closely. The human body is the most perfect and yet the most delicate of all created things. It is capable of the greatest results and it is liable to the greatest disorders. The slightest causes sometimes seem to throw its delicate machinery out of order while the most simple and common-sense care restores and keeps them in perfect condition. When it is remembered that the amount of happiness or misery we are to have in this world is dependent upon a perfect body, is it not strange that simple precautions and care are not exercised? This is one of the most vital questions of life. People may avoid it for the present, but there is certain to come a time in every one's sexperence when it must be faced.

"And here pardon me for relating a little personal experience. In the year 1870, I found myself losing both in strength and health. I was unaccountably tired, my appetite was fickle, my head troubled me at times and occasionally pains would shoot through different portions of my body. I could assign no cause for this decline, but it continued, until finally I called to my aid two prominent physicians. After treating me for some time the declared I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and that they could do nothing more for me. At this time I was so weak I could not raise my head from the pillow and I

FAINTED REPEATEDLY

My heart beat so rapidly it was with difficulty I could sleep. My lungs were also badly involved. I could retain nothing upon my stomach, while the most intense pains in my back and bowels caused me to long for death as a relief. It was at this critical juncture that a physical longing which I felt (and which I most firmly believe was an inspiration, caused me to send for the leaves of a plant I had once known in medical practice. After great difficulty I at last secured them and began their use in the form of tea. I noticed a lessening of the pain at once; I began to mend rapidly; in five weeks I was able to be about, and in two months I became perfectly well and have so continued to this day. It was only natural that such a result should have caused me to investigate most thoroughly. I carefully examined fields in medicine never before explored. I sought the cause of physical order and disorder, happiness and pain, and I found the kidneys and liver to be the governors, whose motions regulate the entire system."

After describing at length the offices of the kidneys and liver, and their important part in life, the doctor went on to say:

"Having found this great truth, I saw clearly the cause of my recovery. The simple vegetable leaf I had used was a food and restorer to my well nigh exhausted kidneys and liver. It had come to them when their life was nearly gone and by its simple, yet powerful influence, had purified, strengthened and restored them and saved me from death. Realizing the great benefit which a knowledge of this truth would give to the world I began in a modest way to treat those afflicted and in every case I found the same which I had experienced. Not only this, but many who were not conscious of any physical trouble, but who, at my suggestion, began the use of the remedy which had save my life, found their health steadily improving and their strength continually increasing. So universal, where used, was this true, that I determined the entire world should share in its results, and therefore placed the formula for its preparation in the hands of Mr. H. H. Warner, a gentleman whom it cured of a severe kidney disease, and who, by reason of his great worth, high standing and liberality, had become known and popular to the whole world. This gentleman at once began the manufacture of the remedy on a more extensive scale, and to-day, Warner's Safe Cure, the pure remedy that saved my life, is prepared and used in all parts of the world, and can be found on the shelves of every druggist.

"I am aware a prejudice exists against proprietary medicines, and that much of this prejudice is too often well founded, but the fact that of a pure remedy is no less beneficial than a proprietary medicine. A justifiable prejudice exists toward quack doctors and their nostrums, but it is not right that this prejudice should be extended towards all the doctors who are honestly and intelligently trying to do their best. Because Warner's Safe Cure saved my life, and before it became a proprietary medicine, it is not reasonable to suppose that it will do others and keep still more from sickness and death, that it is sold with a government stamp on the wrapper? Such a theory would be absurd."

The doctor then paid some high compliments to modern science, and closed his lecture as follows:

"How to restore the health when lost, and how to keep the body perfect and free from disease must ever be man's highest study. That one of the greatest remedies of the present day has been made in obtaining the true seat of health to be the kidneys and liver all scientists now agree, and I can but feel that the discovery which I have been permitted to make, and which I have described to you, is destined to be the greatest, best and most reliable to those who suffer and long for health as well as to those who desire to increase the joys they now possess."

Every Person to be a Real Success.

In this life must have a specialty; must concentrate the abilities of body and mind on some one pursuit. Burdock Blood Bitters has its specialty as a complete and radical cure of dyspepsia, liver and kidney complaints, and all impuritics of the blood.

It is stated as a fact that many people hear best when their eyes are closed. Most of this in church.

Burdock Blood Bitters

Cures scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, and all humors of the blood. Cures dyspepsia, liver complaint biliousness, constipation, dropsy, kidney complaints, headache, nervousness, female weakness and debility, when used in time. (16)

To remove paint: Sit on a freshly painted cellar door, or wash the rosy cheeks of a sleeping beauty.

"Grunt it Out!"

The above is an old saw as savage as it is senseless. You can't "grunt out" liver complaint, nor liver complaint, nor nervousness once get a good hold. They don't themselves in that way. The taking doses of Burdock Blood Bitters is better than "grunting it out." What we can't let's not endure. (15)

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire save stop at Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

"I spread my waves from pole to pole," remarked the wig-maker as he removed other capillary adornment.

Headache.

Headache is one of those distressing complaints, that depends upon nervous irritability, bad circulation, or a disordered state of the stomach, liver, bowels, etc. The Rev. and proprietor of the Canada Presbyterian was cured after two years of suffering from headache, and now testifies to the value of Burdock Blood Bitters. (17)

Rev. Dr. Pusey left a personal estate of more than $80,000. All his property goes to his daughter, Miss Mary Amelia Pusey. That is to say, it is all salted down.

Thousands upon Thousands

Of dollars have been spent in advertising the celebrated Burdock Blood Bitters, but the fact accounts only in part for its enormous sale. Its merit has made it what it is, the best blood medicine ever devised by man. (18)

The Nose.

Perhaps you may think that there is not anything to say concerning this part of the face, but that is a mistake. The nose, indeed, has much to complain of—there are so few persons who are thoroughly satisfied with the appendage they possess. I know, I may add, a family with a great historical name whom you can not offend worse than by alluding to the mere word "nose" in their presence; and to allude to their own nose would be sufficient to provoke a challenge. You may smile, but this is a fact.

"How is it that there are so few ugly noses in these parts?" I asked a lady the other day, whilst admiring her lovely children. "Our levatrici" (sages-femmes in French, but monthly nurses would do as well here), she said, "take care to form the child's features into correct shape, from the moment it is born until it leaves their care, when the mother continues the operation, which is to gently pinch and stroke the nose downward every time the child is washed and dressed," and thus "stumps" are never seen. But this must be done from the very first day; and, in like manner, the mouth may be prevented from growing into very wide proportions if small mouth-pieces are provided for children wholly or partially brought up by hand.

Even children no longer babies and all young persons may improve the shape of the nose by using the handkerchief in a downward direction, instead of brushing it upward and from side to side.

Children should be checked if they rub up their nose with their hands. All habits, indeed, which tend to spoil the shape or enlarge the nostrils must be checked. Red noses are usually the result of tight lacing or tight boots, which make both the hands and nose red, Over eating and drinking also produces a red nose; cold feet and hands likewise do the same. Any obstacle to a proper circulation of the blood, indeed, always makes the nose red. When red without any of these causes, then there is a skin disease, and the usual remedies must be adopted. Always use linen handkerchiefs, whatever may be the fashion. And now, a hint, which I think will be of great service to you, especially if you are apt to take a cold in the head. Well, then, every morning, as soon as you rise, plunge your face in cold water, and draw up the water into the nose several times. This, besides preventing cold, cleanses and clears the head, and braces all its organs. Lastly, this operation is particularly recommended to all who sing, as by keeping the nose and head clear the voice is rendered stronger and more tuneful, and singing itself becomes easier.

The remedy is so easy that it is worth trying, but precisely because it is easy, no one perhaps will try it. If you try it, however, do not expect a miracle, but continue the practice every morning, when I am sure you will be satisfied with the result. I need not, I hope, warn you against the snuff-box, be it even a diamond one. Snuff-boxes are now reserved for antiquarian collections, or for some few aged people who retain the habit from their fathers.

The New York Tribune's Kingston special reports that at Accord, Ulster county, the other day, a fiery meteor dropped in Rondout creek, sending up a column of steam and boiling water. Next day two boys found in the creek a sword six feet long, the blade pointing upward, and its hilt buried in the mud. The weapon has two edges, and weighs seventeen pounds. The blade is covered with hieroglyphics, and the workmanship upon the weapon is of the finest description. The hilt seems designed for a hand three times as large as a human hand. There has been a disastrous fire at Samara and a large portion of the town has been destroyed.

Mr. Kenny, M.P., described the Pope's circular as a shameful insult to the priests and people of Ireland.

While the King of Belgium was riding near Bois, his horse was run against by a bicyclist. The King was thrown to the ground, but not hurt.

During a fete and fireworks display in a village near Lisbon, a bomb filled with dynamite exploded, killing four persons and wounding twenty.

The United States steamer "Lancaster" has arrived in Cronstadt with the envoys to represent America at the coronation of the Czar. They were received with the usual honors.

The remains of Prince Gortschakoff were interred in the Church of St. Sergius, St. Petersburg. The Emperor, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and other prominent officials were present.

The British barque "Arabia," from New Orleans, has arrived in Reval. Twenty of her crew died from small-pox. The captain attempted to enter Helsinger, and was fined 300 crowns for contravening the regulations of the port.

Altogether, six persons have been arrested at Ballina on a charge of conspiracy to murder landlords. An infernal machine and a number of firearms were seized. It is believed the arrests have been made through the evidence of an informer.

A correspondent of the Temps in London says Great Britain agrees with Lord Dufferin that Egypt does not need the rebel provinces in the Soudan. If the Khedive consents she will commence negotiations with the False Prophet with the object of defining their positions.

Judge O'Brien, in passing sentence on Fitzharris, said: "The crime of which you are convicted is morally the same as murder. The deaths of Lord F. Cavendish and Mr. Burke were mainly owing to your act in inducing Smith to point out the victims." The prisoner seemed stupefied at the sentence.

The Freeman's Journal, commenting on the Pope's circular, says His Holiness has been misled, if not entirely deceived, by the emissaries of the British Government, who know that if the Parnell party remains unbroken it will hold the balance of power in the next Parliament.

The Times says the emigration scheme proposed by Canadian capitalists hangs fire, because of the objections of Mr. Gladstone to a system of State aid. It says the Cabinet will insist on the Canadian Government becoming responsible for the money loaned to further the scheme, probably thinking by that means that they will cause the project to be abandoned. There is reason to believe, however, that Canada will accept the responsibility.

At a meeting held to support the Parnell testimonial, Mr. Sexton, M.P., violently attacked the Goverment, declaring it the worst that ever ruled Ireland. He said the Papal circular applied only to the clergy. He thought it desirable to send a deputation to explain to His Holiness the true condition of affairs in Ireland. The Irish people were sorry to lose the valuable services of the clergy, but with or without allies, the movement must go on. (Cheers). Two priests present joined in the applause.

At a meeting of the National Land League held at Dublin, Mr. Biggar, M. P., said anything coming from the Pope should be received with much respect by the League. They should, at the same time, express their opinions in plain but inoffensive terms. He said that he was not suited for such a task, and, further, that it was unsafe for him to remark upon the present manner of administering justice. He urged the importance of preparing for a general election for members of Parliament. Mr. Moyne, a Parnellite member of Parliament, said the Irish people should take theology and not politics from Rome. Mr. Parnell, he declared, was the head of their political church.

The Force of the Wind.

The recent cyclones which have swept over some of the Western States forcibly call to mind how meagre our knowledge of them is, and also hint at the importance of systematically studying their origin, direction, and effect. The force exerted by them, as a factor entering into the calculations of the architect and engineer, should make an intimate acquaintance with the laws governing them imperative. We are fairly familiar with their form and reasonably certain of the causes which create them, but of the other and to us infinitely more important part of the question—the pressure—we are lamentably ignorant. Whether we will ever be able to retard their progress, diminish their power, or successfully divert them from objects which we do not wish endangered, are elements of the problem that can only be discovered by methodical observation covering a wide territory, and taking into consideration the topographical and atmospherical influences tending to their creation and continued existence.

There are but two plans for measuring the pressure of high winds: one by the aid of instruments, and the other by calculating the force required to overturn, or demolish, obstacles which have stood in their path. The first plan is only of little practical value since the best anemometers are either destroyed, or rendered inoperative, befor registering the pressures we are most interested in obtaining. The perfect anemometer has yet to be constructed, and it matters not whether it is designed to give the velocity or pressure of the wind, so long as it is accurate and so sensitive and quick responding that it will register what we call gusts of wind. It should also unerringly follow all changes of direction in the wind, and, if possible, measure the upward or lifting power when this case arises.

It is a simple matter to estimate the force expended after a body has been overturned, but when costly bridges are the objects operated upon, the experiment is anything but economical. This plan will only give us the force necessary to do the work, but the amount in excess we can only guess at. To illustrate this: A locomotive was overturned in 1871, the calculated maximum force required to do this being 93 pounds to the square foot; the wind exerted a force greater than this, but how much cannot be found. The fact that a storm passes between two points at a rate that will produce a certain pressure to the square foot is of no assistance, since it is not the average but the maximum pressure we seek after.

That the whole question of wind pressure is shrouded in darkness is shown by the difference in practice among the leading engineers of this country, and also among those of other countries, and the allowance made for wind pressure, whether 20, 30, or 50 pounds to the foot, are the results of individual study, not of combined research.

"Uncle Tom."

The "Motley Fool" of the Detroit Chaff has the following interesting reminiscence of the Rev. Josiah Henson, whose death at Dresden was recently chronicled: "Five years ago one October night, I sat all through a performance of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' and really enjoyed it. The enjoyment came through my guest. We occupied a box at Whitney's, the company was Gotthold and Rial's and my guest was the Rev. Josiah Henson—the only original "Uncle Tom." Learning that the old colored preacher was in the city visiting one of his married daughters, I interviewed him for one of the dailies and in the following week succeeded in inducing him to visit the theatre for the first time in his life to witness 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' He knew nothing of the dramatization of Mrs. Stowe's novel except what he had been told, and his interest in the performance had in it for me something both pathetic and amusing. In the scenes with little Eva his eyes would glisten as they brought to his mind events in his life on the plantation of Amos Riley in Davis county, Kentucky, whose property adjoined that of 'Massa' St. Clair, to whom Josiah Henson or 'Uncle Si' was hired out most of the time. Little Eva was in reality Susan St. Clair, and Mr. Henson told me that she used to read for him and he would sing for her, and that one time when he was rowing her across Blackford's Creek, a small stream that separated the two plantations, she fell out and he rescued her—and so arose the great steamboat scene of the book and the play. During the performance the Rev. Mr. Henson gave vent to his delight and surprise by remarks in a loud tone such as: 'That's it,' 'Jest right,' 'Oh, that's nat'ral,' and when Uncle Tom was being beaten he groaned audibly as he remembered how Bryce Lytton, a Maryland overseer, had pounded him years before so that he had never been able to raise his hands high enough to feel 'ob de wool dat grew on de top ob his head.' 'Uncle Si' died last Saturday on his farm at Dresden, Ont., at the advanced age of ninety-four. He was a fine looking, intelligent old darkey, with a shiny black skin, keen, sparkling eyes, a full silver grey beard, and his head was covered for the most part with thick, snowy wool. He had visited England and had lectured and preached in London, where he was received by Queen Victoria. The Rev. Josiah Henson has left behind him forty-four grand-children and ten or a dozen great grand-children, and what with that horrible piece of stage literature know as 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' there need be little fear but that the memory of Harriet Beecher Stowe's hero will be perpetuated."

NORTH-WEST NOTES.

Culled from our Manitoba Exchanges.

The new club house at Brandon will soon be reopened.

Beefsteak is selling in Emerson at twenty cents, and in Brandon twenty-five cents per pound.

A paper mill will be erected and operated in Brandon provided sufficient municipal encouragement and assistance is given.

The Jews engaged in the C. P. R. gravel pit, Portage la Prairie, work the same on Sunday as any other day.

The Orangemen of Gladstone are preparing for a grand celebration on the 12th of July. Invitations have been issued to a number of the sister lodges.

St. Vincent Herald:—The timbers for the Emerson railway bridge are being hauled by team from this station. The Canadian railway charge $14 per car from St. Vincent to Emerson a distance of three miles. This certainly is extortion.

The Provincial Exhibition will be held in Portage la Prairie, commencing on Monday Oct. 1st, and will be continued until Saturday, the 6th. Entries must be made by the 18th of September with Mr. Acton Burrows, the secretary.

The first baby was born in Moosejaw on May 4th, the same day that the first number of the News newspaper was issued. That paper insists that both the youngster and the paper should have a present of a town lot.

Freight conductors on the C. P. R. have been instructed not to allow passengers on their trains without tickets. In case fares are collected, the conductor is directed to purchase the ticket himself, and thus do away with the practice of sending money to the audit office.

The C. P. R. Company is trying to purchase the gravel pit which they have opened near the eastern boundary of Portage la Prairie. Nearly all the ballast for their line between there and Winnipeg will be taken from the pit. About one hundred and fifty shovellers are employed.

The total number of cars which, during the month of April, arrived at Regina for consignees in and about that place was 242. Of these, 151 contained merchandise for merchants, 17 immigrants' movables, 49 lumber, 23 stock, 15 hay, 8 vehicles and implements, 5 potatoes, 4 flour and 3 oats.

Early Bargains with the Indians.

The disposition to cheat and defraud the Indians has been much exaggerated, at least as regards the English settlers. The early Spanish invaders made no pretense of buying one foot of land from the Indians, whereas the English often went through the form of purchase, and very commonly put in practice the reality. The Pilgrims, when in great distress at the very beginning, took baskets of corn from an Indian grave, and paid for them afterward. The year after the Massachussetts colony was founded, the court decreed: "It is ordered that Josias Plastowe shall (for stealing four baskets of corne from the Iodians) returne them eight baskets againe, be fined five pounds, and hereafter called by the name of Josias, and not Mr., as formerly he used to be." As a mere matter of policy, it was the general disposition of the English settlers to obtain lands by honest sale; indeed, Governor Josiah Winslow, of Plymouth, declared, in reference to King Philip's War, that "before these present troubles broke out the English did not possess one foot of land in this colony but what was fairly obtained by honest purchase of the Indian proprietors." This policy was quite general. Captain West in 1610 bought the site of what is now Richmond, Virginia, for some copper. The Dutch Governor Minuit bought the island of Manhattan in 1626 for sixty gilders. Lord Baltimore's company purchased land for cloth, tools, and trinkets; the Swedes obtained the site of Christiana for a kettle; Roger Williams bought the island of Rhode Island for forty fathoms of white beads; and New Haven was sold to the whites in 1638 for twelve coats of English cloth, twelve alchemy spoons, twelve hoes, twelve hatchets, twelve porringers, twenty-four knives, and twenty-four cases of French knives and spoons." Many other such purchases will be found recorded by Dr. Ellis. And though the price paid might often seem ludicrously small, yet we must remember that a knife or a hatchet was really worth more to an Indian than many square miles of wild land; while even the beads were a substitute for wampum, or wompom, which are their circulating medium in dealing with each other and with the whites, and was worth in 1660 five shillings a fathom.—T. W. Higginson, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Great Readers.

The girl or boy who reads the greatest number of books is not always the best informed, because they read without judgment. We know of some young people who have a strange ambition to be considered "great readers." They do not use the word "great" in reference to what they learn by reading, but in regard to the number of books and pages that they read. They are not careful as to the quality. Usually this class of readers select the poorest quality, because they can get through with it quicker. Indeed, they will sometimes boast of the rapidity with which they can read a book as though it were an occasion of honest pride to read a whole volume at one sitting. They forget that it is not the amount of reading which benefits one, but the quality and the manner in which the book is used. Some get more good from a page than others from a volume.

The family of Mrs. Stowe hold her in such reverence that some of them think she wrote the Bible. Her little grandson, at the age of five, swinging on a neighbor's gate, was reproved by his mother, who told him Mr. Smith would not like it. "I don't care for Mr. Smith," said the urchin, "nor for his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is his." "Willie," asked his mother, "do you know who wrote those words you use so?" "I don' know," was the reply: "Grandma Stowe, I s'pose."

The STANDARD *office is noted for being prompt in filling orders for job prining, which has been the means of greatly increasing its custom. We are in receipt of many letters of thanks and good wishes from outlying points for neatness in design and despatch in forwarding orders. Our business is increasing especially in fine work, which we made a specialty, having added recenly to our already large assortment of material of fashionable type, besides having one of the most rapid and perfect running job presses manufactured. We are prepared ta execute all kinds of work in Pamphlets, Circulars, Letter Heads, Note Blanks, Receipts, Business Cards, Funeral Cards, Posters, Hand Bills, Dodgers, Printed Envelopes, &c., &c. MARKDALE, MAY 23RD 1883.

METHODIST UNION.

It were strange indeed if so great a movement as that which is on foot for the unification of the Methodism of this country should not meet with more or less opposition. Indeed, so accustomed have we become to look for antagonism to every thing that is good, we should be almost inclined to look doubtfully upon any great undertaking that did not encounter something of the sort. We are not surprised therefore that this great measure of denominational unification has received so much opposition, but rather that it has so little. A good deal has been written against it, it is true, and written with a certain sort of ability, too, but the paucity of argument in most of this writing has, as it appears to us, been one of its most striking characteristics. This has not been the result of any want of ability in the writers who have attempted to champion the loosing side in this controversy, but to the scantiness of the materials with which they had to work. That the weight of fact and argument was chiefly on the side of their opponents was not so much their fault as their misfortune. All that can be reasonably expected of any man is that he make the best of his opportunities, and we think that it is due to those who have written on the opposition side in this discussion to say that they have done this.

TO THE END OF HIS TETHER.

The Advance appears exhausted and, notwithstanding his recent prating about newspaper etiquette, now resorts to calling names. The STANDARD subscribers are too respectable a class of people to appreciate such a course, and besides, we have no inclination to stoop to such means. We were first treated with a "sounding of trumpets" high flown language, and a smattering of French, but how soon he fell to his own level, he endeavours to cast a slur on agriculturists by insinuating that we once tilled the soil. Wonder what the supposed Editor of the Advance decended from, was it not from the same calling, we have been informed that his parents were farmers but that this boy would not work, so they made a printers' devil out of him, and it appear he has never yet got through his apprentiship.

MAGISTRATES' COURT.

On Thursday a week ago, Wm. Scott, Dennis Hogan, and Wm. McCaskill, were up before Wm. Brown, and H. D. Irwin, J. P's., at the instance of S. L. M. Luke, complainant, charged with assault. After hearing considerable evidence, the court was adjourned till Thursday last.

On appearing again before the sme Magistrates accompanied with, Mr. James Struthers, J. P., it came out in the evidence, that Dennnis Hogan, had offered Scott $2 to catachise Mr. Luke in a summary manner for writing correspondence to Durham, of which Luke had no knowledge whatever. It appears the occurrence took place in the "Revere Hotel," as follows: D. Hogan, Called Luke in and gave him a drink while McCaskill went to arouse Scott who was sleeping, and after riling him up with "rye," got him to work to beat Luke, which he did in a treacherous manner After hearing the evidence the magistrates fined Scott $15 and costs or 30 days at hard labor; D. Hogan, for abetting the same fine, and W. McCaskill, $10 and costs or 30 days. Hogan however had, between the sittings of court, levanted for parts unknown.

On Thursday afternoon, two charges of selling liquor without license, against D. Hogan were tried before the same Magistrates, at the instance of inspector Harris, each of which were proven and the defendant fined $30 and costs.

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL.

This Council met in the Town Hall, Flesherton, Monday May 7th, present, Messrs. Christoe, Elliott, Wright, McArthur and McKee.

Minutes of April session read and approved Communication from Thos. Boland and McL Purdy, presented and read.

Accounts as follows were ordered to be paid: Jame Webster, lumber for Priceville bridge and repairing bridge on town line, $21; A. Webster nails furnished for repairing Priceville bridge, $1.68; A. R. Fawcett, printing Auditors Report. $12.

By-law No. 353 to establish deviation of road across lot 27, con. 14, on town line, Euphrasia and By law No. 354 to amend By-law No. 352, Appointing Municipal officers for 1883, were introduced and read a requisite number of times and passed.

Mr. McKee was appointed to act conjointly with the Council of Euphrasia in opening deviation on town line, established by By-law No. 353. The Clerk was directed to correspond with the Reeve of Proton to have culvert on town line opposite Lot 210 repaired, each township to pay share of cost. Messrs. Wright and McKee, were appointed a committee to have bridges on the Saugeen River which were damaged by spring freshet repaired.

Messrs. Christoe, Elliott and McArthur were appointed a committee to investigate damage done to the bridges in Priceville village, and have same repaired.

The sum of five hundred dollars was appropriated to general repairs to roads in the Township for the current year, $125 in each ward, and the councillor for each ward was appointed road commissioner for same. The above amount to include commission for expending the same.

The discussion on the introduction of a By-law to prevent animals from running at large, was postponed until the views of the ratepayers is more fully had on this subject.

Council adjourned to meet as a Court of Revision on Monday June 4th 1883, at ten o'clock.

FIRE AT MAXWELL.

Fom a correspondent.

At one o'clock Saturday morning a small fire was observed burning the outside of the large wooden building, the front part of which was occupied by Stinson & Sharp, as a general store, and the rear as a dwelling house by Mr. Sharp and his sister.

The parties seeing the fire immediately gave the alarm, but the fire being set to the part of the building exactly opposite where the coal oil was kept, very soon come in contact with the combustible fluid and in a few moments the whole structure was in flames, Mr. Sharp and his sister narrowly escaped with their lives. And of the large stock amounting to nearly $4,000, only a few hundred dollars worth was saved.

The house of Mr. Taylor as well as the residence of Dr. Kerr, caught fire several times, and were only saved by the vigilence and energy of their friends.

Messrs. Stinson & Sharp have the sympathy of the whole community. The business done by Mr. Sharp since he took charge of the store excited the jealousy of his three rivals. The public are strongly of the opinion that the fire was the work of an incendiary.

The building and stock were partially insured, yet Stinson & Sharp are heavy loosers.

WHAT THE STANDARD WOULD LIKE TO SEE.

A fine day to-morrow, 24th.

And an immense crowd in Markdale, good order and peace through the day, and Dufferin Hall full at night.

The Revere Hotel discontinue dealing out liquor on Sunday.

A flag on every business house in town to morrow, 24th.

A saw mill built in time for the next season.

Some kind of seasonable weather.

The village inspector examine the yards as to cleanliness, and also fire prevention.

The May cold spell is all right. It is accounted for scientifically by the simultaneous and generally accelerated dissolution of the congelation in the hyperboreal regions, caused by the contiguity of the solstitial period. We are glad to know all about it, and shan't mind it at all in the future, now that the reason for it is pointed out.

For the Standard.

—IN MEMORY—

OF EFFIE, BELOVED DAUGHTER OF A. B. VADUSEN, ESQ., FLESHERTON.

Farewell, gentle, loving Effie.
You have early been called home;
And have left the mourning loved ones,
Here to weep for you alone.

Oh, may thy spirit hover near them,
When they tears of sorrow shed;
And whisper that their darling Effie,
Is safe, though numbered with the dead.

Though they would always love her,
Ever careful of her be;
Yet within their hearts they know,
She is safer Lord, with Thee.

Safe, safe within that heavenly fold,—
What joy that thought should bring;
And kneeling at her Saviour's feet,
She anthems sweet doth sing.

Death had no terror for dear Effie,
On it sweetly she could think,
Smile and calmly talk about it,
E'en when standing on its brink.

Then mourn not for your darling Effie,
Who on earth we'll see no more;
She has only crossed the river,
That we all must soon cross o'er.

Only gone a day before us,
And our time will soon draw nigh;
May we be as well prepared,
For bright mansions in the sky.

As the bright and winning Effie,
Whom we all had learned to love;
And who early found a refuge,
In that happier world above.

Oh, may we all again behold her,
In that land by sin unstained;
When the cares of life are ended,
And the crown of victory gained.

Yes, meet her in that happy land,
Where joy abounds forever;
Where death divided friends shall meet,
Yes, meet no more to sever.

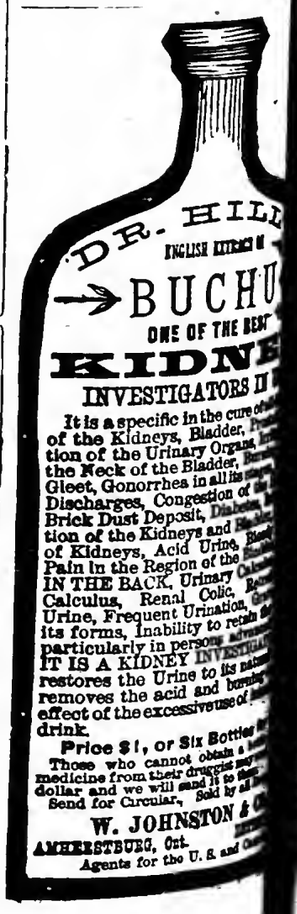
EARS FOR THE MILLION

DOCTOR CHOO'S BALSAM OF COD LIVER OIL positively restores the hearing and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is obtained from a species of small White Shark found in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON LETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows its virtues as a restorative of hearing, and was discovered by a Buddhist priest, and covered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was declared a gift from the Emperor, and became so universal, that for over 400 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case. I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.



I have been greatly benefited. My deafness has received a great check, and I feel another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable. Its curative character is absolute, as has been personally tested by myself, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Dr. Choo, Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, and you will receive by return mail, what will enable you to hear like another person, whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so. See OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

The fourth quarterly business meeting of the C. M. Church, Markdale, was held in the vestry on Monday the 14th inst. There was a full attendance and the business transacted with great harmony and satisfaction. The ministers salary was made up in full, There is a sincere feeling of regret at having to part with the Pastor, Rev. Mr. McDiarmid, his alotted three year being almost terminated, his ability in the pulpit, and broad Christian spirit, his business tact in regard to the legal and financial affairs of the circuit, and his genial off-handed manner together with that of his amiable wife, in visiting, and other social intercourse, has created for him a strong attachment on the part of his congregation, and a high respect by all. The board passed a resolution to have a financial statement printed showing the contributions of each individual who has given towards the various funds, and the expenditure of the same.

The Pall Mall Gazette says the Marquis of Lansdowne has accepted the Canadian viceroyalty, and will probably sail for Canada in October. The News confirms the report of the appointment of the Marquis of Lansdowne to the Governor-Generalship of Canada.

Messrs. Mullarky and McNea have built a boat which they expect to launch to-day, it will sail this season on the Northern Lakes, the proprietors christened it yesterday, but owing to the snow storm there was a small attendance, her name "Dauntless."

We are very much pleased to learn that Mr. Henry Wilson, who has been very ill with inflammation of the lungs and pleurisy, is recovering, and will, we hope, shortly be up, and in his wonted health. Mr. Wilson is not very widely known being a quiet unassuming person, but he is very highly respected by all who know him.

Your correspondent read to-day in the last issue of the JOURNAL with feelings of deep regret of the death of on excellent lady, the sincere, though indulgent, friend of his boyhood, and his firm and earnest adviser in later years. I refer to the late Mrs. James Douglass of Lansdowne. All the old Lansdowne boys—and there are many of them in Gananoque—must remember this good lady, her kindness, her straightforwardness, her industry, her economy, her earnest advocacy of all that is noble and good, her vehement denunciation of all that was base and evil. She was typical of the good woman, and her death will cause a blank in the neighborhood in which she dwelt.—Gananoque Journal.

"Now, Martha," I said, "I am extremely obliged to you for all you have done; and depend upon it, you shall not be forgotten. But I must have the loan of that bonnet and shawl for a little while;" removing the one from her head and the other from her shoulders. "It's no use to resist, old lady! A wilful man must have his way, and so you may as well be quiet. Now, sit down again in that chair, and don't stir unless I bid you, for time is precious. 'Pon my word, Miss Wintock, that bonnet becomes you as well as it does Martha;" placing it upon her head. "Rather a left-handed compliment to you, though. There; tuck up your hair safely out of sight in the crown; don't show any of it on any account. Now for the shawl; close up to the throat—so. Here's a pin. That will do admirably. I declare I should not know you from Martha herself at a yard's distance, if I did not see your features. Now, Martha, old girl, I'm just going to lock you in this room a little while—only a little while, you know, for I will leave the door on the landing open. Benetti will be sure to find you by-and-by: as, if you don't make your appearance below, he will no doubt seek you here, guessing that something has happened. Nay, Martha," as she rose from her seat in great trepidation; "I don't wish to do anything ungentlemanly. I do not at all fear your giving an alarm from the window; it is too strongly barred for you to force it. You wouldn't like to take Miss Wintock's place," pointing to the pallet from which I had released her. "Very well. Then keep quite, and no harm will come to you of this. You can tell Mr. Wintock that you were overcome by stratagem and force, if you like, We will leave you the light, as we can do better without it."

The hint was sufficient. Perhaps, too, in her heart the old creature might not be unwilling that her charge should escape. Before I had done speaking, Miss Wintock and I were out in the long corridor. The door was locked on old Martha; while Miss Wintock carried the dish and cover, to enable her to impersonate Martha as faithfully as possible.

"Now for it once again," I said to my companion; "and I trust with better luck. But you must be as cool as you can, and keep your wits about you. A hitch now will spoil all; for I fear this is your last and only chance. Whenever you feel inclined to faint, think of your liberty or a lunatic asylum."

"Do not fear me," she whispered, "I will do my utmost or perish in the attempt. They shall not tear me from you a second time."

"Very good. Be as quick as you can, till we reach the last turn at the bottom of the stairs. Then, if the coast is clear, I will go forward and reconnoitre."

Hurriedly whispering these and other hints, I led her to the turn of the stairs, and then went forward by myself. A few seconds afterwards, Martha's double came limping down and along the passage into the scullery as directed. The impersonation was excellent and complete, and but for the serious stake at issue, I could have laughed outright. However, this was no time for indulgence in levity, but for nerve, watchfulness and action.

The outer door of the kitchen passage stood open. Benetti usually left it so when he went to get the horses and vehicle ready for his masters. I stole softly towards it, to get a bird's-eye view of what might be going on without, endeavoring the while to arrange some definite plan of proceeding. A rapid glance informed me that the elder Wintock had not yet departed. The gig, with the fine high-bred mare he was accustomed to drive, still stood in the yard. The animal was a noble specimen, of great strength, speed and spirit; but would stand as quietly as a lamb in the Hall-yard while awaiting its master's pleasure, though it required a strong hand to hold the ribbons once upon the road. Benetti was busily engaged in the stable saddling and bridling Mr. George Wintock's horse. I could hear his "Whoa, Dandy!" and other ejaculations less amiable, in his broken English, as the animal seemed to be giving him some trouble. In another few minutes he would bring him out into the yard equipped ready for his rider.

Instantaneously an idea whizzed through my brain like a flash of light, upsetting whatever of scheme or intention I might have already formed. In a second I was at the scullery-door. "Whist! Now—quick. Here; take my arm. Jump into the gig the instant you reach it. Trust to me for the rest."

Miss Wintock looked up at me in wonderment, but immediately obeyed.

Out at the open door and across the yard with Miss Wintock on my arm. "In with you, miss; quickly, for dear life!"

She needed no second admonition, but half lifted by me, sprang nimbly into the vehicle. I was about to follow; but as ill-luck would have it, we were not to get away so easily. The mare, hearing our footsteps, had begun to paw the ground, impatient of delay; and the face of Benetti immediately appeared in the stable-door. Probably he thought his master had come out, and might require his services.

I should have been unconscious of the fact; but in stepping into the gig, Miss Wintock slightly turned her head and caught sight of the Italian's swarthy visage. Her short suppressed cry and eager finger at once pointed out to me the cause of her terror. Benetti comprehended the state of affairs at the first glance, and with a fierce whoop, came rushing at full speed to seize the mare's head. There was not time for me to mount. Stepping forward a pace or two, and exerting my utmost strength, I dealt him a buffet which fairly balanced that which he had dealt me at the Hall door, followed up by a kick on the shins, as he staggered backward and fell, literally yelling with agony. The mare snorted and began to move. Snatching the reins, I sprang into the gig; and had just cleared the yard when George Wintock came rushing out to learn the cause of the disturbance.

CHAPTER IV.

We started off as for dear life. At first, the mare shied a little, and seemed inclined to be troublesome. But she found that it was a practised hand that held the reins, and resigned herself to obedience accordingly. Instead of driving down the avenue to the gate which led into the village, and which was only about three hundred yards from the house, I turned off sharply on leaving the yard, and chose the gravel-road which, leading to the principal entrance of the mansion, passed on through the entire breadth of the park to another gate on the far side of it, and which opened into the high-road. By adopting this course, the odds were considerably in my favor, for I hoped to reach the park gate and emerge into the high-road before any one could start in pursuit. Once fairly on the road, I could try the mettle of the mare. If, unfortunately, we should be overtaken, and it came to a close fight—which I scarcely doubted—the farther we were from Briteleigh Hall the better, and the greater chance I should have of dividing our pursuers and grappling with them singly. Of one thing I was certain, and it rendered me sanguine of success—as Mr. Wintock only kept two horses beside the mare, only two mounted horsemen could follow. He would not try a vehicle; for his others were heavier than the gig, and would place our pursuers at a great disadvantage.

"Soho, soho, lass!—steady!" as the mare, being fresh from the stable, began to lay her ears back and to address herself to her work. It was with difficulty that I could restrain her from dashing off at full speed, We should require her utmost by-and-by. I did not wish to wind my animal at starting, but to husband her strength for a long pull.

Steadily across the park at a sharp trot. The gate is reached. Throwing the reins to Miss Wintock, I leap down, unbar the gate, and lead the mare through. Up again, and off, but rather faster than before, though I still held the mare in check, for I could see there was a heavy drag for her up a long steep hill a few miles distant. If we can only reach its summit, we will then be not more than a dozen miles from Raleigh station, whence we can reach the metropolis. It is a trying task for the mare; but she must and shall do it. Miss Wintock had scarcely spoken since our exit from the Hall, seeming fearful of distracting my attention, but evidently in a state of great excitement; and every sense is on the alert, for she looks back repeatedly and earnestly through the looming darkness, and starts nervously at the slightest sound.

The foot of the hill is gained. It is a much heavier drag for the mare than I had anticipated, for the road on this part has lately been gravelled, and with a vehicle behind and two persons in it, no animal can fairly be expected to ascend it at full trot. Suddenly, Miss Wintocks grasps my arm. "Listen! They are already on our track!"

I turn my head. The sharp percussive ring of horses' hoofs strikes faintly on my ear. We are pursued, and by more than one person; there are at least two on our trail, and they are following us at full speed. No doubt the Wintock have saddled the extra horse, and will leave untried no means, fair or foul, to regain their captive.

The mare toils and pants as the steep acclivity begins to tell upon her powers. It is brutal to give her the whip, but it must be done. She must strain every muscle to the utmost, even though I feel that I am doing the plucky animal a gross injustice.

We are more than half way up the hill, and the remainder is not nearly so steep; in fact, simply a gentle rise. With a snort, a proud toss of her flowing mane, and a loud neigh of defiance, she pricks up her ears and increases her speed. She has caught the clatter of the rattling hoofs behind, and, with the instinct and emulation of all spirited animals, is determined not to be distanced. Gallant creature! Not another stroke with the whip, if I have to fight our battle out on foot on the road. Indeed, there is no occasion; on gaining the ridge of the hill she has bolted. The foam is frothing and dripping in fleeces from her bit; the wheels are whirling with a fierceness that renders us dizzy. I can hear and feel the strain upon the shafts as her iron-clad heels dash the sparks from the flints on the road, and every instant expect them to snap like rotten tow. Will the axles hold and the springs stand? The friction is enough to make tires and spokes fly asunder.

The moon is just rising above the horizon. By her light we can discern two mounted riders coming on behind at a great pace; one is considerably in advance of the other. No doubt they are the Wintocks. They are gaining rapidly upon us. Ah! the foremost is Mr. George. I recognize the horse also; it is the swift supple bay he usually rides, and which is more than a match for the mare at any time, much more so with a vehicle and two persons behind her. There is no hope for it, and we cannot escape an encounter.

How furiously our pursuers ride! George Wintock is within a hundred yards. I fancy I can see by the light of the moon that his visage is ghastly with passion. I can see his coadjutor strike the rowels fiercely into the flanks of his charger, in order to come up with him. The mare is getting over her pet, and is slackening her speed. I tighten my grasp on the reins and speak coaxingly to her. She is under command and well in hand. Shall we pull up at once and do battle? No we will hold on till the last minute.

The foremost rider is close upon us; the second is not far behind. With loud imprecations, they shout to us to stop. I glance at my companion. The cool night air and the hope of escape have wrought wonders; the stern, almost fierce light on those lustrous eyes reassures me.

"Can you take the reins for a minute?"

She stretches out her delicate fingers by way of reply.

"Pull evenly and not too tightly. Keep her in the middle of the road, if you can. Be cool, and let her go her own pace."

"Draw up, or you're a dead man!"

I turned. George Wintock was within a yard of me, his hunting-whip raised, the heavy handle about to descend upon my skull. Springing to my feet and balancing myself as best I might, I poised the gig-whip, parrying his blow and keeping him at bay. Finding that I had the longer weapon, he immediately changed his tactics for a dastardly mode of attack, of which no man, let alone a sportsman, who is supposed to love his horse, could ever possibly be guilty. Spurring his steed, he rode past me to the mare's head, and raising himself in the stirrups, aimed a crushing blow just behind the ears, intending to fell her to the ground, in which case we should in the melee have been at his mercy. It was well meant; but at the critical instant the animal swerved slightly, so as to evade its full force. It was, however, sufficiently powerful to make her stumble and sink almost on her knees. But the ruffian had for once reckoned without his host. He was within reach of my whip-handle, and, as the mare rose, I, wrought to a pitch of desperation by our position, and incensed by his cowardly and brutal act, swung the but-end with resistless sweep, striking him on the side of the head, breaking the whip-handle into several pieces, and hurling him headlong against the bank by the roadside. I had the satisfaction of seeing his horse gallop riderless away.

A shriek burst from Miss Wintock, and I clutched the reins. It was high time, for the poor mare, mad with agony, was up on her hind-legs, fighting with her fore-feet in the air, For a second it seemed as if we should topple over; the next, she was staggering from side to side like a drunken man. Mechanically, I drew one of my small pistols—in my excitement I had till that moment entirely forgotten them.

"Keep off, sir!—keep off, as you value your life!" I shouted at the elder Wintock, for he was close upon us.

His reply was a torrent of imprecations and threats.

"Give it to me!—You attend to the mare," cried the heroic girl as she snatched the pistol quickly from my hand. "I know how to use it, and will not be retaken alive!"

In truth, there was full occupation for both my hands, as momentarily I expected the poor animal to fall in her flurry. It was as much as I could do to keep her on her legs.

Encumbered with the mare, there was no chance of defending myself in the gig. I was about to pull up short, jump into the road, and face the enemy on foot, when a heavy blow from the butt-end of Mr. Wintock's whip across the back of the head struck me from my seat. Had I not let go the reins with one hand and caught at the side of the gig, I should have fallen on the mare's back. As it was, I slipped sideways to the bottom of the gig, leaning powerless against the splashboard. The mare gave a lurch, and was nearly down, but with a struggle recovered her footing. Mr. Wintock's arm was raised to repeat the blow. Suddenly there was a vivid flash and a loud report. Miss Wintock had fired straight at our assailant, who on the instant had pulled up short, so that the ball struck the animal instead of the man! Stung with the wound, alarmed with the noise, it uttered a loud snort, bounded aside, galloped a short distance, and then fell, Mr. Wintock narrowly escaped being crushed as it stumbled and rolled upon the ground.

The report of the pistol startled the mare, and seemed to arouse her failing energies. Pricking up her ears, she shook herself till the harness rattled again; then started forward at a brisk pace, though not nearly so fast as before. The Wintocks had got the worst of the encounter. Yet our plight was but a sorry one. I could scarcely keep my seat in the gig, from the effects of the blow, which had almost stunned me. My wound, too, bled profusely, saturating Miss Wintock's white kerchief, which, as we rode along, she had contrived to bind around my head, in spite of her own nervous agitation.

We had gained the level road and our progress was easier. But the mare had been cruelly used, and it was evident would not stand a long journey without rest. The station was still many miles distant. In her present state, she must knock up long ere we could reach it. Indeed, I was far from feeling sure that I could myself hold out during such a journey. There was, too, just a chance that Mr. Wintock, being well acquainted with the locality, might, by misrepresenting the case, or by bribery, or by an admixture of both, procure fresh horses and aid without returning to Briteleigh Hall, and then recommence the pursuit. It was an ugly fact—I had literally stolen his mare and gig. I had also eloped with his ward; for so he might term it, though she was no longer a minor. These, on the face of things, were plausible pretexts by which he might almost command assistance from any reasonable person. Before us stretched a long dreary common, which we must cross. There might be other dangers, from tramps or from gangs of gipsies, who not unfrequently encamped in that locality. In my present state I could be but of little use to my fair companion as a defender.

Miss Wintock seemed to share my unspoken thoughts. Turning to me, she said, "Mr. Meredith you have been brought into sad trouble on my account. It would have been better, perhaps, for you to have left me to my fate."

"My dear young lady, do not pain me by indulging such a thought for a moment. If occasion demanded it, I would gladly do the same again. The risk to me is nothing. I only wish I could see my way clearly what to do next for the best. But I confess myself totally at a loss," I spoke faintly and despondingly.

"Can we not seek shelter for a while, at least at the first inn we happen upon? Your wound could be looked to, and the mare might rest a little."

"I fear that would not do. The Wintocks, knowing that we are on the high-road, will probably guess that we shall make all haste to the metropolis. Depend upon it, they will not part with you without another effort. It is now getting very late. If we stop at all, we must put up till the morning; for I do not see how we could start again from a strange inn till early dawn. No doubt our pursuers will make every inquiry in following us, and will be quickly on our track. What if they should overtake us, and give me in charge to the constable for stealing the horse and gig? Not that I care for myself; but you would be left without a protector, and entirely at their mercy. And yet I fear that I could do but little in that way just now. Indeed, I am at my wits' end; for it is plain that we cannot travel much farther in our present plight."

"Then why not leave the high-road at once? See! there are lights in that valley yonder to the left; and there is a turning a little farther on, which apparently leads that way. Let us try it. Possibly, we may find a safe refuge. They will not dream that we dare stay so near the Hall. If they hunt for us at all, it will be farther away."

The suggestion struck me as a capital one; and in fact there seemed to be no alternative. "Good!" I said; "very good! A lady's wit excels a man's invention, any time." So saying, I turned the mare's head, and leaving the high-road across the common, drove steadily down to the spot where the lights appeared.

At about two miles' distance we found a scattered village. The lights we had seen were reflected as from the windows of the only inn in the place. The house was just about to be closed for the night; for the one or two who always stay to the latest minute to drain an extra glass, were departing, some of them with rather an unsteady gait. Ringing the yard-bell, I gave the mare and gig into the sleepy hostler's keeping, and, with Miss Wintock on my arm, walked into the house. Boniface was seated in the bar-parlor, taking it very easily. Making myself quite at home, I handed my companion to a chair and called for refreshments. While he was serving us, I said: "Landlord, I want a sleeping apartment for this young lady."

The fellow was a mere clod, sheepish, carroty-haired and bloated; apparently a good-tempered kind of calf, yet sufficiently astute where his own interests were concerned. He eyed us both for a moment very suspiciously. Truly, neither of us cut a respectable figure. Miss Wintock in her plain dark dress, surmounted by old Martha's horridly antiquated bonnet and threadbare shawl; and I with my wounded head bound up in a bloodstained handkerchief. There was sufficient reason for the man's distrust. "Very sorry, sir!—very sorry, indeed! can't have it. Never let beds to strange folks this time o' night."

"Well, but my good man, you see——" I commenced remonstrating.

He gruffly cut my speech short. "Nos! I doan't, and I doan't want to. You can't have any beds here; and that's flat."

Just then the landlady entered the room. She seemed to be rather a genteel sort of person compared with her spouse, and to be about retiring to rest. I at once appealed to her.

"Madam, I was requesting the landlord to oblige me with a night's accommodation for this young lady. We have been attacked on the road, and compelled to turn out of our way; and we cannot possibly reach our destination to-night. I am agreeable to make any shift myself—a shakedown in your hay-loft, or a stretch on the settle by the fire here. Put me anywhere you please, so that you make the lady comfortable. You have our mare in the stable and gig in the yard: put them under lock and key as security, if you like. We are willing to pay to the full any reasonable charge as well, in advance. What more can you require?" As I spoke, I took out my purse, not very heavily lined, truly, but sufficiently so for present need. Money Miss Wintock had none.

The landlady glanced suspiciously at Miss Wintock. She could not make her out at all. Her costume was decidedly not that of a lady; but the word "attacked" awakened her curiosity.

"Deary me! attacked by them tramps. I am glad they did not rob you, for I see you have still your purse. How did you manage to get away from them?" And then she hurriedly proceeded with a string of eager questions, scarcely waiting for a reply.

"She is really a lady born and bred," I interrupted. "You surely will not turn her out again into the road at this time of the night!"

"But I cannot understand why a lady should come abroad in such a dress as that," she replied sarcastically; while she spoke an idea seemed to force it way into her mind, and she archly added, "unless it is a runaway match. In that case, my husband and I would rather have nothing to do with it. We might get into trouble."

"I sh'ud think not—I sh'ud think not! No runaway folks in Bob Simpson's house, if he knows it. Come, young people, you must go fudder; we can't have folks like you here," blurted out the landlord, moving from the room, and calling to the hostler, "Ben, put that 'ere mare in agen; lady 'and gen'l'man 's a-goin' on."

I was about to remonstrate further and more strongly; but Miss Wintock rose indignantly to her feet. Hitherto, her natural shyness, combined with the false and very unpleasant position in which she was placed, had kept her silent. Unpinning the old shawl, and raising the hideous bonnet, she shook her glossy black hair until it hung down in clustering masses on her shoulders. "Yes, landlord, I am a lady—though you seem to doubt it—and a very shamefully oppressed and injured one. I am not compelled to enlighten a stranger respecting my private affairs; but this gentleman has just risked his life in my service. You see he is not in a fit state to drive me on to the next town, even if it were not so late. I beg of you as a man—if you have any manhood in you—and for humanity's sake, to accede to his request. I pledge you my word, my honor as a lady," she continued proudly and passionately, and with a short scornful laugh, "that you incur no risk. We are not burglars, that you should dread us so."

The moment Miss Wintock threw aside her bonnet and began to speak, the landlady fixed upon her an earnest and scrutinizing look, bending forward with parted lips and scanning her features narrowly. "Why—surely—can it be?" she exclaimed in wonderment, eagerly seezing the lady by both hands—"Why, Bob, 'tis Miss Wintock, as I'm alive! Don't you remember my dear young mistress, that used to be at the Hall? Oh! my dear young lady, who could have dreamed of seeing you in such a pickle! Whatever has happened? Where have you been so long? They said you left the Hall and went abroad, after your poor pa's death. Stay here! Yes; that you shall—for a twelve month if you like, and have the best bed in the house too."

The sudden outburst of the landlady took Miss Wintock by surprise, and the warm-hearted creature rattled on in such voluble style as to admit of no reply.

Bob Simpson had returned to the bar-parlor, after bawling out his orders to the hostler from the passage, and had stood as if stupified during Miss Wintock's transformation and passionate appeal. It was more than his limited stock of brains could cope with. He had half turned away again, possibly with the intention of hastening the hostler's movements. But his wife's exclamations brought him to a sudden halt, and he remained staring and gaping with open mouth, as the mutual recognition took place, Mrs. Simpson, in her delight almost forcing Miss Wintock back into the [illegible] from which she had risen.

"Eh! What? Bless me! Miss Wintock! Jump 'o my wig, who'd ha' thought it! How d'ye do, miss? Glad to see ye, miss, thank'ee kindly;" and he took her hand in his great rough, clumsy one and moved it up and down, as if he were applying a pump-handle. Off he started into the passage and to the back-door which led into the yard. "Ben!" he shouted, "take that 'ere mare out agen. Gie her a rub down and feed her well. Lady and gen'l'man ain't a-goin' on agen."

It was a lucky hit our turning off the high-road, for the landlady proved to have been an attached servant of Miss Wintock's parents, who had lived with them first when quite a girl, had grown to womanhood in their service, and afterward married a comfortable though not very intelligent partner. The numerous kindnesses she had received from her dear young mistress as she still fondly termed her, and whose special attendent she had been, now bore grateful fruit; and she was most assiduous in her kind attentions to us both, though it was evident that her curiosity was excited to the highest pitch by Miss Wintock's sudden appearance at such a place, alone, in such company as mine, and above all in such strange attire.

"Ye're safe housed for the rest o' the night, miss, at least," said our host, as, raising his glass to drink the young lady's health in good health, he glanced up to the old-fashioned blunderbus suspended over the mantle-piece, and to which was appended a card with "Loaded" inscribed upon it in legible characters. "I sh'ud like to see a little half-dozen on 'em try to git you out of Bob Simpson's house! I'd make 'em—make 'em——" But here the action of his brain did not keep pace with the warmth of his feelings, and he was at a loss for a simile. "Ah!" he blurted out at last, "I'd make every one on 'em grin like a monkey with his head on a chopping block."

"Bravo! my worthy friend; you're a Briton to the bone," I replied, grasping his hand. "Once safe in London we do not fear. It is the getting there. I don't think it like we shall be traced till daylight. Then no doubt the Wintocks will be on the alert, and scour the neighborhood far and near. A thousand unlucky chances may happen to bring us together; or they may even now have procured fresh horses and proceeded to Raleigh, and intercept us when we arrive in the morning, as we enter the suburbs."

"Now, listen to me a minute, Bob," interrupted his better-half. "It is only [illegible] miles across the country by the byroads to Slowham station. [This I did not precisely know.] The train passes through on its way to London about eight in the morning. I will lend Mis Wintock another dress and a bonnet and cloak. You let Mr. Meredith have your loose greatcoat, and the [illegible] brimmed low-crowned hat you drove to market in. It is too large for him; but I can easily pad it. Ralph shall drive the pony and cart over with them the first thing in the morning, so as to be in good time. He needs to know nothing. As soon as they are fairly on the road, let Ben start with the mare and gig for Briteleigh Hall. It won't do for them to be found on the premises; that might get us into an awkward mess. Should he meet any of the Wintocks' people on the road, he can speak the truth, and say that a lady and gentleman left them here to-night, desiring the mare to be sent back in the morning. And if they let him drive them on to the Hall, and leave them in the yard with the same message. To-morrow being market day, he is sure to get a lift part of the way back at any rate."

Shortly after settling our plan of action we retired to our several rooms, but only for a short space, for we were astir again before daylight. Bob and his spouse insisted upon giving up their bed to Miss Wintock whilst I lay down in a spare one.

Punctual to the minute agreed upon, Ralph was at the inn-door with the pony and cart; and we took a grateful and affectionate leave of our host and hostess. We reached Slowham just in time to catch the train, and by noon we were safe within the precincts of the metropolis.

Scraps from Dublin.

It was nearly midnight, one lovely moonlight night, in Stoneybatter. A group of corner boys were lingering near a public house, although half an hour had elapsed since the closing time. A window in a basement house close by opened, and a night-capped head protruded itself over the sill. "Johnny! Johnny!" hailed a voice. No answer.

"Johnny," said one of the group, on hearing the summons repeated, "don't ye hear the mother callin' ye?"

"Johnny!" wailed the maternal voice again, "what are ye doin' down there in the street this hour ov the night?"

"Luckin' at the mune," answered Johnny, "as 'tis knolledge ye want."

"Lave the mune alone, an come in to supper."

"Arrah, go in to bed out of that. Who's layin' a finger on the mune?"

Two sweeps were sitting on the curbstone in Dorset lane, having just completed a job. The wife of one came up with a half loaf and a quarter of butter on a dock leaf. She broke the loaf across and sawed the butter in half with her hand. Each took his piece and began to spread the butter. Her husband worked his well in with his thumb. By the time the butter was laid on to his satisfaction it was more like marine store than like butter. It was mottled, gray, and spotted. He bit away contentedly. Presently he came upon a hair. He spitefully plucked it out and held it close to his wife's face. "Luck a that, Johanna! Luck at that!" he roared. "An' you knowin' I would rather meet the divil nor a hair in me butther!"

An Engineer's Strange Experience.

Last week, while the big ninety-ton engine was filling her tank at the depot, a Journal reporter and Engineer Dirting had the following conversation:

"Did you ever take a train up the Tehachapi grade at night—I mean since the horrible accident?" asked the reporter.

"Yes. I made a trip over that part of the rode the last time I was down," replied the engineer, "and, so help me God, I never want to see another sight like the one I witnessed that night."

"What did you see, if I may ask?"

"Well, I don't like to talk about such things, for I'm different from most of my brethern, and don't believe that spirits visit the earth, but what I saw that night almost convinced me that they do on some occasions. I had had a very hard day's work, and the night was one of the most fearful that I ever saw on the mountain, and I've been over the road more than a thousand times. Well, just as we were passing where the cars jumped the track, my fireman—the young man in the cab now—called my attention to a man lying on the track only a short distance ahead. It was only a moment's work to stop the engine—we didn't have a train. The cowcatcher was within about three feet of the body when we stopped, I thought it was some poor tramp who had fallen down and frozen to death. I could see the body just as plain as I see you now, but when I got down and went in front of the engine I couldn't see the sign of a man, nor where any one had been.. This was a sticker, for there were several inches of snow on the ground, and had any one been there I could have seen the print in the snow. I was so much astonished that I could not speak for a few minutes. At last my companion asked if he was dead. I told him there was no one there, and he replied: 'What's the matter with you? I see him right at your feet.' This caused me to take the second look, but not the sign of a man could I find. I got back into the cab, and, strange to say, I could see that body just as plain as day. I sent my fireman down and watched him. He walked all over the body, and came back in a moment with the whitest face I ever saw on a human being. Neither of us could speak a word. It was terrible; so I started up the grade, determined to get away from the horrible thing. When we passed over the spot where the body seemed to be I never heard such yells in my life. They came from both sides of the road."—Modesto Farmer's Journal.

A Jack that Killed a Grizzly.

A fight is on record in the courts at Pescadero between a jack weighing 750 pounds and a grizzly bear of same weight. The jack is owned by a man named Ipse, and is a vicious brute. A man named Black, a raiser of blooded cattle in that neighborhood, had been troubled for several weeks by the visits of a grizzly, which killed and carried off a calf, and all his efforts to capture the bear had been unavailing. Finally he advertised in several papers of the State, offering $50 to any person who would kill the bear. Ipse read the offer, and resolved to take his jack to the corral and see what the result would be. Accordingly the jack was duly installed. In the night along came the grizzly, and, seeing the jack and fancying a change of diet, he made an attack upon him; but as no one saw the fight it is only supposed that bruin made the first overture. Anyway, next morning when the corral was visited bruin lay stark and dead and the jack was quietly feeding off the pile of hay. An inspection of him disclosed the fact that his breast and sides were fearfully lacerated by the bear's claws, and one of his fore feet was dislocated. But bruin was "all broke up." He had his lower jaw all smashed to pieces; all of his ribs on the port side were all stoved in, and one of his fore legs was fractured at the shoulder. He was generally smashed all over. Ipse naturally claimed the reward of $50, but Black refused to pay it, claiming that the jack was not a person and therefore not entitled to the reward. All Ipse's arguments failing, he resolved to have recourse to law, and, accordingly, suit has been brought.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Eagles in Deadly Conflict.

This morning a man was telling on the street of a terrific battle he witnessed between two eagles yesterday on the Reavis place. The birds had come together in the air, about the tree tops, and one was trying to get hold of a jack rabbit the other held in its claws. They would fly at each other with tremendous force, screeching and scratching like wildcats. The air was filled with flying feathers, and the sport was an immense sight to the spectator, who sat on the fence watching it. Finally the eagle with the rabbit dropped his prey, and pitched in for all he was worth. He knocked his foe out in the second round, and then, swooping to the earth, he took hold of his rabbit, and sailed away to the top of an old oak tree. The dead eagle fell to the ground, and was picked up by the young man who saw the fight.—Chico Record.

The Proposed Sahara Sea.

M. De Lesseps reports favorably on the proposed Sahara Sea scheme. Soundings 73 meters deep have shown the existence of nothing but sand. The African inland sea might easily be made, with the aid of 100 excavators, representing the work of 100,000 men. M. De Lesseps has met with the best reception from the Arab soldiery and population. On the 3d inst, he arrived at Biskra, having completed a survey of the country between Gabes and the Marsh Lakes. He declared that the soil will allow of the excavations necessary to connect the lakes with the Mediterranean, that the works will present no extraordinary difficulty, and that the concessions asked for with regard to the forest and adjoining lands will make the scheme remunerative and wholly independent of State aid, subvention or guarantee.

A Child of the Storm.

A little boy, just old enough to walk, was found under some bushes near Headland, Ga., the other day, and no one knows where he came from or why he was there. It is surmised, however, that the little fellow is a wait of the late storm that swept over that section and over five States. It is not unreasonble to suppose that he child had a ride on the wind to the spo where he was found uninjured.—From th Eufaula Times.

High Price Provisions.

We do not see much sense in the outcry raised about the high price of beef and other provisions of one kind and another. Wasn't this the very object of the N. P. that the different producers should be delivered from undue competition, and should have fair, liberal prices for all they had to sell? Well, why should not the farmers and butchers have their share in this? If everybody is so prosporous as is said, then everybody can pay handsomely for all they get. Besides there is a very large quantity of butcher meat sent regularly from Toronto to Winnipeg. Of course all that leaves less for the meat-eating folks of the metropolis, and they must pay in proportion. It is the same thing with eggs. Why one paper mentioned a single consignment of ten thousand dozen! When there is such competition the prices must go up, and all the co-operative stores in the world won't prevent the natural action of supply and demand. It is hard, very likely, on those who have fixed incomes, and these perhaps small ones; but they must just be comforted with the thought that if they are pinched the country in general is prosperous. When people live in a country and at a time when the beauties of dearness in all that one eats, drinks, and wears are celebrated both in prose and verse, why should there be any ado about beef being fifteen cents a pound and eggs as much per dozen? Come, let us all be reasonable, and rejoice, instead of crying out against the store-keepers. We wonder how they all make a living. If a third of them would go on farms and become producers instead of middlemen, it would be an improvement.

Our Immigrants.

This immigration business will need to be very closely looked into, and stringent provisions made against its abuse, else the results will be disastrous. The steam ship companies are paying a premium of $4 a head to immigration agents, and accordingly the agency net is being cast, and is gathering of every sort, especially of the most undesirable. They are sending Neapolitan beggars by the thousand, and the result of all cannot but be injurious in a very high degree. There are poor men in Toronto able and willing to work, who at this hour are glad to get one, two, or three days' work in the week, and who, but for their wives going out to wash, etc., would all but starve. What is the use of adding to their number? With one eighth of the inhabitants of New York paupers, there seems small reason for importing more. With our Canadian cities swarming with street arabs for whom nobody seems to care, and who are growing up in ignorance and vice, to fill the gaols, often feed the gallows, what in the name of common sense is the use of bringing over to this country the sweepings of the old world streets?

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA.

A Strong, Prosperous Canadian Company.

ASSETS. - $1,072,511.91.

The SUN is the only company in America which issues an unconditional policy.

The liberality of its dealings with its policyholders is its most prominent characteristic. It acts on the principle that what a man pays for he should get. That the assurance money should be paid promptly and without quibbling.

Before insuring in any company, read the policy and see if it is so drawn as to deprive you of your just rights. See if the company is in the habit of contesting its claims.

The SUN has not a contested claim on its books.

In the centre upon this background of Gold is a representation of our Saviour (head and shoulders) clad in a scarlet robe, while a mantle of soft blue thrown over his shoulders and the delicate halo of glory round his head produce a beautiful picture. Entwined around this picture are a number of beautiful passion flowers. All around this centrepiece are other scenes which portray the principal events in the life of our Saviour.

1st. The birth of our Saviour. 2nd. The child Jesus in the Temple. 3rd. The baptism, which shows Christ being baptized in the river by John, and the [illegible]

The extraordinary beauty of this wonderful picture has been favorably commented on by a great many newspapers. Every Sunday School Teacher should have one, every minister should have one. Every religious family, every Bible Class, every Meeting House should have one. Agents, you have the biggest thing ever yet offered you. Bear in mind this is no cheap black and white print, but a costly and beautiful Chromo-lithograph in brilliant colours upon a background of Gold. Nothing equal to it has ever yet been seen.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner &Co's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at above Drug Store.

The first sitting of the Court of Revision, for Glenelg, will be held at the Town Hall, on Monday next the 28th, and Holland Township the same day at Holland Centre.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

The next sitting of Division Court No. 5 will be held in Markdale on the 21st June, and in Chatsworth the day following.

DYSPEPSIA & LIVER COMPLAINT.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer, every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use accordingly and if it does you no good it will cost you nothing. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

MR. BRIGHT TO MARRY HIS DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.—It is stated that Jno. Bright, who has been a prominent advocate of the Deceased Wife's Sister bill, is about to marry the sister of his first wife. Mr. Bright is 72 years old. His action is regarded as a protest against an imquitous law.

OH, WHAT A COUGH!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of 50cts., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your Cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves Croup, and Whooping Cough, at once. Mothers do not be without it. For Lame Back, Side, or Chest, use Shiloh's Porous plaster. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store Markdale.

We have a speedy and positive cure, for Catarah, Diphtheria, Canker mouth and Head Ache, in SHHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY. A nasal Injector free with each bottle. Use it if you desire health and sweet breath. Price 50 cents. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

The Provincial Exhibition will open in Guelph on the 24th September.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND

Is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate, It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

The Toronto Daily World is the spiceist, newsyist paper of the day, only 25 cts a month, just the thing for mechanics. Subscriptions taken at this office will be sent direct through the mail, specimen copies can be seen at the STANDARD Office.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Wm. Lucas & Co, bankers, Markdale, have $200,000.00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest; moderate charges.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132 84.

Our correspondents will do well to bear in mind that their copy will require to reach us on Tuesday, to insure an insertion the same week.

Work given out. On receipt of your address we will make an offer by which you can earn $3 to $7 evenings, at your home. Men, Woman, Boys or Girls can do it. H. C. Wilkinson & Co., 195 and 197 Fulton St., New York.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Rev. Jas. Scott has returned to Owen Sound from Florida where he has spent the last two winters.

The old stone storehouse at the shore end of Boyd's warf, Owen Sound, was burned recently. A spark from a passing engine is supposed to have been the cause.

The Railway Company are making extensive improvements at their dock and station at Owen Sound. The freight shed has already been enlarged to a considerable extent, and the dock accommodation is being largely increased to meet the requirements of the rapidly increasing trade. We understand it is the intention, when the improvements are completed, to have a stationary engine on the dock with a crane for moving heavy freight between cars and vessels.—O. S. Times.

A tug of war took place at Ingersoll on the 24th between the Police forces of Toronto and Hamilton, the former winning in two straight heats.

ACCIDENT.—While house cleaning on Friday, Mrs. B. O'Connor of this town fell from a step ladder breaking one of her legs in two places. Under skillful medical treatment she is progressing as well as could be expected.—Orangeville Advertiser.

SOUTH GREY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—The Semi-annual meeting of this Association was held in this village on Tuesday and Wednesday the 22nd and 23rd May. There was a larger attendance of Teachers, although the weather was anything but favorable. Mr. McMaster, the President, called the meeting to order and after prayer by Mr. Ferguson, Inspector, the President read a very practical address to the teachers. Dr. McLellan of Toronto, delivered addresses on "The art of Questioning", "Intelligent teaching of simple rules" and "The Teacher and his work." Mr. Tait, of Collingwood, gave addresses on "Text books, what the are and what they ought to be" and also on "How to teach Geometry to beginners" Mr. McCabe, of Durham read a paper on "The Teacher's position and his salary." Mr Ferguson, Inspector, read a paper on "A Glance at the pas year." Mr, De LaMater, of Owen Sound, gave an address on "Trustee Boards". Mr. Rundle, of Dundalk, had a paper on "Music in Schools." Mr. Patterson, of Maxwell took up "Decimal Fractions". Mr. J. C. Buchanan read a paper on "Agricultural Chemistry in Schools", and Mr. Bain, Sec'y, read a paper for Mr. Ried on "Teacher's patienee." During the first day a number of drawings were exihbited from Flesherton and other schools which were highly creditable to the scholars. A number of questions from the "Question Drawer" were answered. Mr. Tait, of Collingwood solved the difficult problems in Natural Philosophy and Arithmetic. The following resolution was put to the meeting and carried, That all Teachers in South Grey shall pay into the funds of the Association the sum of $1 yearly, for which sum each Teacher shall receive the Canadian School Journal and the use of the Teachers' Library. On the evening of the first day an entertainment was held in the Town Hall. Mr. Anderson rendered some fine Scotch Songs. Mr. Tait gave a number of excellent recitations and Dr. McLellan delivered his popular lecture "This Canada of Ours." As a public lecturer the Dr. cannot be surpassed. In fact the lecture was a marvel of eloquence, patriotism and elocution.

The officers elected for next year are J. C. Bain, President; C. Ramage, Vice-President; M. P. McMaster, Secy-Treas.; Managing Committee, Messrs. Gorsline, Dunbar, Smith and Clark; Delegate, J. C. Bain; Auditors, Messrs. Gorsline and McArthur.

This was considered to be the best meeting ever held by the Teachers of South Grey. The next meeting will be held at Durham in October.

24TH MAY.—The Ladies Aid of Presbyterian Church celebrated the evening of the 24th, by giving an entertainment in the Town Hall. Mr. M. Richardson very ably filled the chair; the programme was well sustained by songs from Mr. Anderson, music by Miss McDowell; readings by Mr. Fawcett and Mr. McMaster; Recitation by Miss Hopkins; Song by Miss Ada Sproule; Music by Mr. Campbell, Speeches by Rev. A. Wilson and Dr. Christoe, and recitation by Mr. J. Blackburne. The ladies are to be congratulated on the success of their entertainment. Proceeds at the door $25.00.

CHANGE OF PULPITS.—Rev. Mr. Forest of Dundalk preached in the Town Hall (Presbyterian) last Sabbath, and Rev. A. Wilson preached at Dundalk.

THE DIGNITY OF THE COURT UPHELD.—On Monday as Mr. J. W. Armstrong, Clerk of Division Court, accompanied by four of his family and Mr Aikenhead of Toronto were driving out on a fishing expidition, one of the seats of the buggy upset and emptied the contents on the road. Master Wesley had one arm knocked out of joint. The others escaped serious injury. Dr. Christoe was called and replaced the wounded limb. We are happy to inform you that the dignity of the court was upheld by Mr. J. W. Armstrong retaining his seat.

PARLEYING WITH A MANIAC.

The Story of a Midnight Adventure.

White Place is the untruthful name of a narrow court that runs down a hundred feet or more from the south side of Eighteenth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, N. Y. It is lined with tenements. On the first floor of the last tenement lives hack driver Timothy Buckley. The apartment consists of two rooms, the back room being the bedroom, Mr. Buckley's family consists of a wife and two little girls. They have been in the apartment only a few days. Mr. Buckley's occupation keeps him from home during the first part of the night.

Mrs. Buckley is 30 years old. She does not look like an imaginative woman, and she told this story:

On Tuesday night she sat in her front room until 11½ o'clock, reading a newspaper. Her two children were asleep in a bed in the adjoining room, the sliding doors standing open. Before preparing for bed she to pray. While still on her knees she heard a quick step on the pavement of the court, and then in the hall. The door opened. As the step was like that of her husband, she remained on her knees till her prayers were said, and then arose to her feet. Turning around, she found that a stranger was in the room. The man was tall, had dark hair, and a light moustache, and was decently dressed. He had a pleasant face. Bowing, he said:

"I have been looking for you fifteen years."

"Looking for me for fifteen years!" said Mrs. Buckley in great surprise. "You have the advantage of me. I don't know you."

"Yes," he rejoined. "I've been looking for you all that time."

Thinking he might be some friend or relative of her own family, she invited him to sit down. He took a chair by the table.

"Who are you, and what do you want?" Mrs. Buckley asked.

"I wanted to see you. You are

are you not?"

The question nearly frightened Mrs. Buckley into a faint, for she saw that his eyes were unsteady, and that he was undoubtedly crazy. Thinking of the safety of her children, and knowing if she screamed for help that none would be likely to reach her quickly at that hour, she controlled herself with an effort and answered slowly:

"Yes, I am. Now, what do you want?"

"I will tell you what I want. I am a surgeon, a French surgeon, educated at the University of Paris. For thirty years I have dissected the human body to learn of its wonders. For twenty years I have devoted myself especially to the heart. In all that time I have dissected only dead hearts. Now I desire a live one to dissect, in order that I may see its pulsations. I knew you would be here, and that your health demanded that your heart be taken out and cleansed. That is why I came. Did you ever hear of cleansing a heart while it was alive?"

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Buckley. "I know three doctors only just a little way from here who tried it, but they failed."

"Of course they did. I never fail."

"No, you will never fail. I am sure of that."

"Are you, really?" he asked, brightening up.

"Oh, yes, I am perfectly sure of that."

Then, fearing that he would see the children, or that they would attract his attention, she shrugged her shoulders, and, looking around, said: "How cold it is. Don't you feel a draught? I think I'd better shut the doors."

"You must shut the doors at once," he said, "for your heart must be kept warm."

It was a great relief for her to see the doors safely closed, even though the outer door was closed at the same time. She walked back to the chair she had occupied, hoping only that her husband would come home. As she sat down, the doctor saw, in a corner, a skipping rope belonging to one of the little girls.

"Just the thing," he said, pointing to it. "I can tie you in the large armchair, perform the experiment, return the heart safely to its place, give you a dose of my elixir, and you will live forever. See!"

He drew from various pockets half a dozen small knives and scalpels, each wrapped in tissue paper. They were one at a time to show her that each was in admirable condition for delicate work. A knife was produced from an inner pocket and handed to her. Its edge was keen.

SLOWLY UNROLLED AND HANDED TO HER

"Now," he said, when she had looked at them, "I'll take the rope——"

"Hold on," she interrupted. "That will hurt. You will have to tie me very tight, because if I moved it would spoil the operation, wouldn't it?"

He nodded.

"Those other doctors had a table when they tried it, and there were broad straps to hold the woman down on it tight. I know where it is. Besides, there's a neighbor of mine who is afflicted about as I am. She lives just two doors down the street from the court. She's a particular friend of mine, and I'd like to have her operated on at the same time. If you'll go for that table, we can call and get her on the way. What do you say?"

To her intense relief, the man readily assented.

"It's cold out, isn't it?" she said. "Hadn't I better get a shawl?"

She said this to keep him from thinking he only wanted to get him out of the house. He agreed, saying again that her heart must be kept warm. Throwing a shawl over her shoulders, she led the way through the hall to the court, hoping to get him down the street, two doors from the court, to a saloon that was open, so that help could be obtained. They walked slowly up the court toward the street, the doctor frequently directing her to wrap herself closely in order to keep her heart warm. In passing one of the doorways, Mrs. Buckley thought she detected the outlines of a man, but the court was too dark for her to make sure, and so she did not dare to take the risk of screaming. Just as the two got beyond the doorway the doctor asked her if and then Mrs. Buckley was shoved to one side, and three men grasped the doctor from behind. They had sprung from the shadow of the doorway. A fierce struggle followed. Not a word was spoken, the only sounds being the heavy breathing of the men and their prisoner, and the stamping of their feet on the stone paving of the court. After a time the doctor was secured with handcuffs on his wrists and ankles.

HER HEART WAS STILL WARM,

He was not wholly conquered then, but had to be carried to the end of the court. There one of the men gave a whistle, and a close waggon like an ambulance drove up. He was lifted in, and then the others got in with him and drove away.

"I hardly know what I said or did during the fight," said Mrs. Buckley to the reporter, "but I didn't faint. After he was secured, one of the men said something about his being an escaped lunatic, and that I mustn't say anything about it. As they passed into the street I think I recognized one of the men as a keeper at the Bloomingdale Asylum, but I am not positive about that."

"What made you think he was from Bloomingdale?"

"It was a man named McGee, if it was the one I think it was. His sister used to live with me, and he came to see her. He was a north of Ireland man. It was he that told me not to say anything about it, and I thought I recognized his voice, too."

"Did you ever see him at the asylum?"

"No: I never was inside such a place in my life, and I don't want to be, either. His sister told me he worked there. He has a brother there, too."

"Were there no letters or words painted on the ambulance?"

"If there were I was too badly frightened to see them. I have not slept a wink since then, and I am almost dead."

"How do you suppose the lunatic found his way down the court to your place?"

"I don't know, sure, unless it was that I had a bright light burning, and every other place was dark, being so late."

Timothy Buckley, the husband, said that he got home at 3 o'clock Wednesday morning, and found his wife prostrated by her fright. She had been unable to get back to the house for a time after the men carried away the doctor. The rest of the night she neither slept nor let him sleep. The picture of the doctor and his instruments was constantly returning to her, and she started up in the greatest of terror.

At the Bloomingdale Asylum the reporter found the two McGees. They are brothers, and from the north of Ireland. James remembered calling on his sister when she lived with Mrs. Buckley. But he said he had not recaptured a lunatic in Eighteenth street on Tuesday night, and manifested evident ignorance of the case. Other attendants who were questioned spoke in like manner.

FREAKS OF FORGETFULNESS.

Of all the ills to which flesh is heir, forgetfulness is the one that furnishes the greatest number of laughable episodes; and while many of them are very annoying, the mirthful feature that is their almost invariable companion affords a certain degree of compensation.

Near one of our Atlantic sea-ports there resides an old whaling captain commonly known as Uncle Gurdon. To keep from getting rusty, he made his home on the river-bank, where he could keep a boat, and fish or paddle about as he liked. The place was about five miles from the city, and, as occasion required, Uncle Gurdon and his wife would journey townward for the purpose of shopping. Reaching the city, the horse and waggon would be left at the water-trough on the Parade, and each would go in different directions, carrying their bundles to this common receptacle, the first through waiting for the other. On one of these shopping excursions Uncle Gurdon made several trips to the waggon, finding each time that additions had been made to the store of bundles—a sign that his wife was busy. Having completed his purchases, he unhitched his horse, and the ferry-boat having arrived, climbed into the waggon and drove on board. While crossing the river one of his acquaintances stepped up and asked how he was getting on.

"Well, I'm getting on nicely, but I'm bothered just now."

"Why, is anything going wrong?"

"No, nothing special; but I came down to do some shopping, and I've forgotten a parcel I was to get," and the old gentleman scratched his head in a perplexed manner.

"Well, I wouldn't worry. You will think of it next time," said the neighbor; and the boat having reached the landing, Uncle Gurdon drove ashore, and went on toward home.

When nearly half way there he was met by another friend, who stopped to have a chat.

"How do you do to-day, Uncle Gurdon?" he asked.

"Oh, nicely, nicely; though I'm a bit worried just now."

"Worried? what about?"

"Well you see, I've been to town shopping, and there's a parcel of some kind that I've forgotten. I can't think what it is, and it bothers me."

"Oh, never mind it! You will recollect what it is before you go again. By-the-way, Uncle Gurdon, how is your wife?"

"Jerusalem!" cried Uncle Gurdon, slapping his knee with great energy. "It's my wife that I've forgotten! She went town with me to do some shopping, and I was to wait for her."

And Uncle Gurdon turned round, and went back to the ferry for the parcel that he had left behind.—EDITOR'S DRAWER, in Harper's Magazine for June.

There is a fire department in Jerusalem which is very different from what is understood by that term in this country. On the comparatively rare occurrence of a fire, the news is leisurely conveyed to small detachment of soldiers, who with great dignity march to the scene of the fire, carrying their guns on their shoulders. In front of them march four men with broad-axes. As there is no water supply in the city, a fire-engine would be useless, and certainly would be opposed to the traditions of the people. Instead of wasting their time in such unhallowed efforts, these soldier-firemen strike picturesque attitudes around the fire, murmuring "Allah is good!" And when the fire has spent itself they go back to their quarters, conscious of having done their duty.

The Free Church of Scotland was formed by an Act of Secession of nearly half the body from the national Church of Scotland, headed by Dr. Thomas Chalmers and other eminent persons, May 18, 1843. The difference which caused the separation arose on the rights of patrons to nominate to a living, against which the Free Church claims that the parishioners have the right of a veto.

The followers of El Bab, the modern Persian prophet who was put to death by the Shah in 1849, are now headed by Beheyah Allah. When the Bab was led out for execution one of the shots from the guns of the soldiers whose duty it was to fire a round at him as the drop of the gallows fell, cut the rope and he fell to the ground on his feet. Unfortunately he was too confused to run away, and he was instantly surrounded and again hung.

Canterbury Cathedral was sacked by the Danes in 1011, and burnt down in 1067. It was rebuilt by Lanfranc and Anselm, and the choir completed by the Prior, Conrad, in 1130, and in it Becket was murdered, in 1170; and it was burnt in 1170. It was rebuil by William of Sens (1174-78), and by "English William," 1178-84. A new nave was built and other parts, 1378-1410. The great central tower was erected by Prior Goldstone about 1495.

TRUSTWORTHY TESTIMONY.

Prominent English Opinions Upon an Important Subject of Great Value to Every Reader.

The day for pretenders is past. Men are judged by what they can do, not by what they say they can do. The reading public of to-day is too discriminating to be long deceived by the spurious. If an article have merit it will become popular; if it is unworthy it will sink into oblivion. For years the people of England and America have put to the severest tests a compound regarding which most ambitious claims have been made. Under such ordeals as it has been subjected to, nearly every known preparation would have failed, but this one did not. In England and the United States to-day, it is the most widely known and popular of all public preparations. In verification of which note the following:

In September last, one of the English foresters of India returned to London, Eng., utterly broken down and debarred from further service by reason of what the examining physicians pronounced incurable kidney disorders and dropsy. He was comparatively a young man, and felt depressed over the situation. Incidentally learning, however, of the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which has attracted so much attention of late, he began its use. Within three months he was thoroughly restored to health, passed medical examination as a sound man and is to-day discharging his duties as well as ever in the trying climate of India!

J. D. Henry, Esq., a neighbor of the late Thomas Carlyle, Chelsea, S. W., London, Eng., became very much emaciated from continued kidney and liver disorders, the treatment he had sought from the vast medical authorities working only temporary results. He then began the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and on May 15th last, declared "I am now feeling physically a new creature. A friend of mine to whom I recommended the Safe Cure for kidney, liver and various diseases, also speaks of it in the highest terms."

R. C. Sowerby, Helensburgh, N. B. was obliged to relinquish his professional duties because of a severe kidney and liver complaint. After using a dozen bottles of Warner's Safe Cure he says: "I am to-day better than I have been for twenty years and I cheerfully recommend the Safe Cure to all who are suffering from these diseases."

Mr. William Jones, 16 Wellington street, Camborne, Eng., says that he was thoroughly treated in St. Bartholmew's hospital, London, Eng., for urinary disorders and weakness. He used Warner's Safe Cure and he says: I am like a new man." It cured him of indigestion, troubles of the bowels, excessive urination and nervous prostration. He adds: I was taking various medicines for over two years from the best doctors, and all in vain, but after taking Warner's Safe Cure for only four weeks, I was brought from death to life."

Mrs. E. Game, 125 Broad street, London, W. Eng., suffered for years from female weakness, skin eruptions and impure blood, but after using Warner's Safe Cure, she says: 'My health is better now than it has been for years."

H. F. West, Esq., 16 Burton Crescent, W. C., London, from his own experience "strongly recommends Warner's Safe Cure to all persons suffering from kidney and liver complaints, as the best remedy known."

Mr. Henry Maxted, 1 Pennsbury Private Road, Wadsworth Road, London, Eng., was cured by Warner's Safe Cure of enlarged liver which produced numbness in his left leg, with a dead heavy feeling of dizziness on the right side of the head. "I have recommended it," he says, "to several of my friends, most of whom have derived great benefit from it."

Mr. W. Clarkson, Hartington, Villas, Spital, Chesterfield, Eng. used Warner's Safe Cure for liver complaint, dyspepsia,. flatulence, vomiting of bile, and mental depression. January 15, 1883, he writes: "After using the eighth bottle I feel better than for many years. It is an invaluable medicine."

Mr. J. Hiscock, station master, Taff Vale Railway, Navigation station, was cured of abscess of the kidney, calculus or stone, discharge of pus, etc., by thirteen bottles of Warner's Safe Cure. "I have long and faithfully tried some of the ablest medical men in South Wales, in vain, one of them remarking that medical science has failed to find a remedy for confirmed kidney disease. The Safe Cure dissolved and brought away about two ounces of stone. I can never praise the Safe Cure too highly."

Mr. Robert Patten, New Delaval, Eng., was much overcome by severe inflammation of the bladder. "I had to urinate about every five or ten minutes with great pain and suffering. My water was full of matter and blood. Both kidneys and liver were affected, and in addition I had a bad cough and heart trouble, (all presumably the secondary effect of the kidney and bladder disorder). He says that after curing his bladder, kidney and liver trouble, by Warner's Safe Cure, his "cough and palpitation are quite gone."

William Simpson, Esq, Daughty Mill, Kirkcaldy, N. B., suffered for years from Bright's disease of the kidneys and consequent dropsy. His body was dreadfully swollen. His appetite was fickle, he was full of rheumatic pains, his urine burned in passing and was full of mucus and brick dust sediment; his pulse was weak, his heart was irregular in its action, his breathing was very much impared, in short he had all the painful symptoms of that dreadful disorder. He spent 17 weeks in the Royal Infirmary, of Edinburgh, under the skill of the best physicians, who having exhausted all agencies at their command, discharged him "as incurable." He says: "I passed water every hour, day and night, having great pain while doing so. It was nearly white as milk, with albumen, and when it stood for an hour, the deposit was a quarter of an inch thick in the bottom of the vessel." When in this desperate condition, he began to use Warner's Safe Cure—the only known specific for Bright's disease of the kidneys—"I have used twelve bottles," he says, and his health is so restored that he adds: "I bless the day when I read that Bright's disease was curable and for so little cost."

The following persons of quality in London and other parts of England are a few of the thousands who have used and have commended Warner's Safe Cure, the great specific for kidney, liver, urinary, female and Brights diseases:

Hon. Freeman H. Morse, 8 Park Villas East, Richmond.

Captain F. L. Norton, Glenesk, Road, Blackheath, Kent.

Hon. S. B. Packard, 14 [illegible] Liverpool.

Such testimonials, from such reliable sources, prove the value of [illegible] which is sold in every drug store, beyond the shadow of a doubt. They prove it is the greatest of all modern remedies for these terrible kidney and liver troubles. What it has done for one it will undoubtedly do for others, and as such it commends itself most warmly to public confidence.

OAKLAND, Ontario, Canada, March [illegible], 1884.

Messrs. A. H. Dixon & Son.

DEAR SIRS,—Yours of the 13th [illegible] received. It seems almost too good that I am to be cured of catarrh, but I know that I am. I have had the return of the disease and never felt [illegible] in my life. I have tried so many things for catarrh, suffered so much and for so many years that it is hard for me to realize that I am really better.

I consider that mine was a very bad case. It was aggravated and chronic, involving the throat as well as the nasal passages, and I thought I would require the three treatments, but feel fully cured by the two sent me. I am thankful that I was ever induced to write you.

You are at liberty to use this letter as you please, that I have been cured at two treatments. I shall gladly recommend your remedy to any of my friends, who are sufferers.

Yours with many thanks.

REV. E. B. STEVENSON.

A BATTLE OF SNAKES

The ... Enterprise, Bastrop, by Mes... ... and ... Eyewitness ... Enemy in Texas.

On a bare spot of this western wilderness, says the Seymour Cressel, of Baylor county, Texas, lay coiled a great rattlesnake warming. Little dreamed he that a mortal enemy was on his trail. But the eye-witness we quote saw the king of reptiles and of shadows, in his bright black garb, slowly approach. The assailant was small, not thicker than a thumb nor longer than a short yard stick. He glided along, now raising his glittering head and darting fire from his eyes. Stealthily he moved on the trail toward the great rattlesnake. Between them was a small log, an old fallen tree; just beyond it lay the rattler. When the little warrior came to this log he raised nearly half his body from the ground, standing on his tail, as a fiery stallion rears before he strikes a powerful blow with his fore hoofs. When it beheld its spotted enemy it emitted a terrific hiss, and as a flash of lightning it sped to the side of the rattlesnake. Now came a contest between science and skill on one side and strength and deadly venom on the other. The little snake, with a skill and knowledge of its foe did not strike home at a first bound. The startled rattler coiled and sounded the alarm. The assailant spun round and round, with his fated little eyes darting baleful fire into the eyes of its opponent, and as it completed each circle sought a chance for a sure and deadly blow. But the other made the inner and shorter whirl with its head and neck to evade the same, and to strike a crushing blow itself, with its great fangs glittering, and all the while the terrific rattles played deadly music. Finally the rattler raised and struck, but his fangs were dodged by the expert assailant, and they bit the earth, while the sciencied little reptile as quickly closed and struck his teeth into the back of the rattler's neck. And now the scene became terrific beyond description. The great snake turned and twisted with widely-distended mouth, emitting a horrid noise as the tumult of the rattling and death struggle increased. For a time, the rattler kept his coils as closely together as possible to prevent the next crushing move of its antagonist, and in a vain effort to twist and shake off its little black enemy, amid short blows. But with a skill that surpasses human comprehension the assailant kept its little body clear of the poisonous fangs and kept its hold firmly. In despair the rattler raised his head as if summoning all his energies for a final effort, and in the twinkle of an eye, as a whip-lash twines around the tree, the king of snakes had coiled himself around the rattler and, tightening the grasp with a startling power, crushed the monster in a second. When the breathless head of the rattler had fallen to the earth the little victor slowly uncoiled himself, and, making sure that the victim was dead, unloosened its hold, and, having snuffed the air of victory, darted off to other fields of conquest.

Fables.

HERCULES AND THE SNAKES.

The infant Hercules having incurred the Hatred of Juno, that Goddess despatched two Serpents, to whom she intrusted the Commission of strangling the Child. The youthful Hero, however, strangled them, and the unexpected Spectacle so surprised his Nurse that she vowed that she would not touch another Drop until the Day of her Death, a Determination which she was with difficulty induced to reconsider upon discovering that the Snakes were not Creatures of her imagination.

Moral—This fable teaches us three things:

1. (As to Juno) never send a snake on a confidential physician's business.

2. (As to Hercules) that a snake in the hand is better than two in the crib; and,

3. (As to the Nurse) That serious inconvenience may result from a mistake in the soothing-syrup bottle.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

A Lion, having been taken in the Nets of Hunter, owed its release to the efforts of a Mouse, which gnawed the Meshes and set the Monarch of the Forest free. Some time afterwards the Lion happened to encounter its tiny Deliverer taken in a Trap and apprehending instant Death. Filled with Gratitude, the King of Beasts raised his gigantic Paw and with one blow reduced the Trap to the Status of a Wire Gridiron and the Mouse to the dimensions of a Book-marker.

Moral—Thus we see the Folly of asking Points from a Big Operator.

Sunlight Not White but Blue.

Since the time of Newton it has been assumed that all the radiations of the sun were to be found in the spectrum, and that these reunited make white light. There is also a tacit assumption that white light is pure sunlight. Some of the early experiments at Allegheny have showed that the light as we receive it has been somewhat altered by the sun's atmosphere. The change is an absorption of rays from the blue end of the spectrum. It follows that our sunlight is more red and blue, and far less intense than it would be if the solar atmosphere did not intervene. But we are concerned with something nearer home. Our own atmosphere repeats the performance, strangles many rays at the blue end of the spectrum, and comparatively few at the red end. What does this mean? Let us shake hands with our friend who wears green goggles. We too have in all our lives seen things in a false light. If we could place ourselves outside our atmosphere—say on the moon—we should find that sunlight is not white; that the sun itself is really blue. To the inhabitants of "other worlds than our," the sun may be a bluer star than Vega.

And Where's the Moral?

Once in a while a dishonest man shows the sincerity of his reformation in something more tangible than words. In Quincy, Ill., a few years ago, a man occupying a position of trust stole $10,000 and decamped to Mexico. According to the popular belief his ill-gotten wealth ought to have brought nothing but disaster to him; but, on the contrary, the investments that he made brought to him a handsome fortune. As he now had plenty of money his conscience impelled him to restore the money which he had stolen. He did so; and, having a competence, will probably be strictly honest in future.—New York Tribune.

NORTH-WEST NOTES.

Culled from our Manitoba Exchanges.

The grade on the C. P. R. through the Kicking Horse Pass will be 1 to 45.

About 600 cords of wood was burned at Poplar Point station on the C. P. R. Prairie fire the cause.

The potato trade is lively at West Lynne. Mr. Guthrie sold 600 bushels the other day at good prices.

Track laying on the Manitoba and N. W. R. is going on rapidly, 12½ miles being laid from Gladstone in a little more than a week.

The Moose Jaw News has made its first appearance. The editor is pleased to find this young town able to support a good newspaper.

The C. P. R. are arranging for the sale of coupon tickets via the Thunder Bay route over all the Canadian line of steamers, and probably over one American line.

In reponse to a petition from the clerks, the proprietors of the Emerson dry goods and grocery stores of the town have agreed to close their stores at 7.30 p. m. every day except Saturday.

A public meeting of settlers and others was to be held at Fort Qu'Appelle on the 24th of May, for the purpose of providing a bonus to start a newspaper. It is intended to give a substantial bonus, which will place a weekly paper on a fair financial basis from the very start.

As Moose Jaw is situated in the most convenient place to be the distributing point for the almost unlimited fertile prairie surrounding it, we feel confident that in a few years this beautiful towns its will be covered with substantial buildings, and that it will be one of the most attractive and important cities in the North-west.

There is a large gang of men at work at the new bridge at Emerson. They are getting pile drivers constructed, and are far advanced with a large scow which will be required in the construction of the pivot pier, as well as in other work. The workmen would have preferred the water to have kept up for some time, as the scow is heavy and will take some trouble to launch. Work is to be pushed forward with all despatch.

Sunday was a big day for immigrants, upwards of 600 persons arrived by the morning and evening trains. A special arrived later, bringing in nearly 300 more, principally passengers from England, Scotland and Ireland by the steamship Circassian, which sailed from Liverpool April 26th, and arrived at Quebec May 7th. They had a pleasant voyage and made the trip by rail from Point Levi in less than six days. They are an intelligent and respectable class of people, and are possessed of considerable means.—Free Press.

The first steam plough for Manitoba arrived here on Sunday en route for Regina. It was manufactured by Haggart Bros., of Brampton, Ont., and is in charge of Mr. Caughill, their agent. It has been purchased by and is now the property of the St. John Farming Syndicate, who paid $5,000 for it. The plough is built on the most improved locomotive principles and is is supplied with eight oscillatory ploughs. It is also provided with a balance wheel by which a separator can be run. It is capable of being run at the rate of four miles per hour, and the company think by running it day and night they can break one hundred acres per twenty-four hours.—Manitoba Liberal.

Little French Ones.

"What? Not lend a paltry ten to me—to your other self?"

"My dear fellow, I should never get it—I know myself too well!"

At an evening party, an author, who is distinguished for his profound egotism, is interrupted in the course of conversation.

When about to take up his parable again he asks reflectively:

"Let me see! What was I saying?"

"You were saying 'I,'" replied one of the company.

"My dear fellow," remarks the judge to the plaintiff, who had lost his action before him that afternoon, "you had a mighty good case, but what made you employ such an ass of a lawyer?"

"Because I had been told that he had the ear of the court!"

Alleged American elopement:

He—"Hurry, dearest, the carriage is at the door and your husband may return at any moment."

She—"Wait one moment. I will not take with me one gift that I owe to that hated man! My jewels! (Tears them off with feverish haste.) Is that all? Ah, I had forgotten! My false teeth! (Casts them on the table.) And now, now I am wholly yours!"—New York World.

Promptness.

Half the value of anything to be done consists in doing it promptly. And yet a large class of persons are almost always more or less unpunctual and late. Their work is always in advance of them, and so it is in their engagements. They are late in rising in the morning, and in going to bed at night; late at their meals; late at the counting-house or office; late at church; late at their appointments with others. Their letters are sent to the post-office just as the mail is closed. They arrive at the wharf just as the steamboat is leaving. They come into the station just as the train is coming out. They do not entirely forget or omit the engagement or the duty, but they are always behind the time, and so are in haste, or rather in a hurry, as if they had been born a little too late, and forever were trying to catch up with the lost time. They waste time for themselves, and waste it for others, and fail of the comfort and influence and success which they might have found in systematic and habitual punctuality. A good old lady, who was asked why she was so early in her seat in church, is said to have replied that it was part of her religion not to disturb the religion of others. And if it were with all a part both of courtesy and duty, not to say of religion, never to be unpunctual, they would save time for as well as annoyance to others, and aid themselves to success and influence in a thousand ways.

Unmarried Women.

One of the greatest social problems of the day is to explain why there are so many marriageable women who never get married. Some say that it is owing to an excess in numbers of women over men, in consequence of which there are not husbands enough to go round. This, however, is disproved by statistics. Take the world through, and figures show that there are as many men in it as there are women. Others attribute it to the expensiveness of modern life. Men do not marry because they say they cannot afford to. But the fact is that no man who truly loved a woman ever hesitated to become engaged to her and eventually marry her because of poverty. There are cold-blooded men, with no idea of any feeling for a woman stronger than languid admiration, who may be deterred from assuming what they regard as a burden in the shape of a wife unless assured of a liberal income, but most men are not so calculating. Others again attribute the evil to women's fastidiousness. They expect too much in a husband, and, waiting for an impossible shadow, let the possible substance slip through their fingers. This is a libel on the sex. As a rule they are no more fastidious than men are, and they are just as susceptible as men to that enchantment of love which invests its object with every perfection and covers up every fault. So far as men and women are concerned, they are as prone to marriage now as in any period of the world's history. Nevertheless, there are the women waiting for husbands and not getting them. They are pretty, they are accomplished, they are sensible, and, under proper training, they would bt wives and mothers, but they never get a chance. What seems to be needed is a more thorough method of bringing men and women into social contact with each other.

Where He Was Left.

"Yes, I am the man who had a corner on maple sugar a few years ago," he replied.

"How much did you buy in?"

"Almost every pound made east of Canada that spring."

"How much did you force up the price?"

"Not a red cent. I lost about $28,000 on that speculation."

"Why, didn't you have the market in your hand?"

"Yes, for a few days. I should have jumped sugar from eleven to eighteen cents per pound in a fortnight, but a Western wretch began making maple sugar from New Orleans molasses, Indian meal and Lake Erie sand, and in a month I was bankrupt. It was, perhaps, a good thing for me, though."

"How?"

"Why, I intended to make a corner on pickles in the fall, and if I had some one would surely have invented a basswood cucumber and cut the price down to fifty cents per barrel."—Wall Street News.

A Curious Puzzle.

The following curious puzzle is said to beat the celebrated "14-14-15," and is well worth investigating: Take a strip of paper or cardboard thirteen inches long and five wide, thus giving a surface of sixty-five inches. Now, cut this strip diagonally as true as you can, giving two pieces in the shape of a triangle, and measure exactly five inches from the larger end of each strip and cut in two pieces; take these strips and put them into the shape of an exact square, and it will appear to be just eight inches each way, or sixty-four square inches, a loss of one square inch of superficial measurement, with no diminution of surface. The question is, what becomes of that inch?

[illegible]

Dickens's literary successes induced him to abandon his intention of going upon the stage; as he said, he now "did not want money, and he had never thought of the stage but as a means of getting it." Yet he could not but bear in mind long afterward how near he had once been to "another sort of life." Nor could he ever relinquish his old fondness for the actor's art; for he scarcely did himself justice when he spoke of the stage as being to him but a means of getting money. He obtained great applause as an amateur actor, and he became famous as a public reader of his own books; his readings, in truth, closely resembling actings, or suggesting rather the readings of an actor than of an author. He was particular on these occasions as to the arrangement of his gas-lights, that his expression and play of face might be properly seen and appraised. With this view a special "gasman" ever accompanied him upon his tours in the provinces. He resorted to much "stage business," and employed sundry "stage properties" when he judged that he could in such wise the better enforce or illustrate the intention of his books. The copies of his stories from which he read in public were marked with as many "stage directions" as are contained in the actieg editions of a play. When but a lad of 16, with a felow-clerk in a lawyer's office, he is understood to have assumed certain characters at a minor theatre—probably one of those establishments supported entirely by amateur actors, such as then existed in Wilson-street, Gray's Inn-lane, and in Catherine-street, Strand. But his skill as an actor first became generally known when, returning from his first visit to America, he joined in the theatrical exhibition presented for a charity by the English officers stationed at Montreal. He played Alfred Highflyer, in "A Roland for an Oliver;" Keeley's character of Mr. Snobbington, in "Past Two O'Clock in the Morning," and Gallop, in "Deaf as a Post." He writes to Forster: "If they had done 'Love, Law, and Physic,' as at first proposed, I was already 'up' in Flexible, having played it of old before my authorship days." Flexible had ben originally personated by Mathews. Dickens, no doubt, had played Flexible at the minor theatre already mentioned in the lawyer's clerk period of his career. In Canada, Dickens was appointed stage manager of the amateur performances, and he displayed the zeal, the energy, and the enthusiasm he was wont to exhibit upon such occasions. As he wrote at a later time, "Once in a thing like this—once in everything to my thinking—it must be carried out like a mighty enterprise, heart and soul." His interest in the cause was almost redundantly demonstrated. "I am not, let me tell you, placarded as a stage manager for nothing," he writes. "Everybody was told they would have to submit to the most iron despotism, and didn't I come Macready over them! * * * The pains I have taken with them and the perspiration I have expended during the last 10 days exceed in amount anything you can imagine. I had regular plots of the scenery made out and lists of the properties wanted, and had them nailed up by the prompter's chair. Every letter that was to be delivered was written, every piece of money that had to be given, provided, and not a single thing lost sight of. I prompted myself when I was not on: when I was I made the regular prompter of the theatre my deputy, and I never saw anything so perfectly touch-and-go as the first two pieces. * * * I really do believe that I was very funny; at least, I know that I laughed heartily at myself, and made the part (Mr. Snobbington) a character such as you and I know well—a mixture of T——, Harley, Yates, Keeley, and Jerry Sneak."—Longman's Magazine.

A Double Discount.

We heard Brother Holmes, of Savannah, Ga., tell a good joke on a Richmond hotel man. He said that, when Dr. Price, of Wales, was attending our June meetings, some years ago, he stoped at Ford's Hotel, and when he asked for his bill, Ford said: "We knock off half the price, as you are a minister." Dr. Price thanked him, and asked: "What do you take off for editors?" "One-half for editors too," was the prompt reply. "Well," continued the doctor, "I am an editor as well as preacher; so I am entitled to two halves, and thus my account is settled." The hotel man laughed and let him go on.—Richmond (Va.) Religious Herald.

The Best Newspaper.

The best newspapers in the world own the public as their masters. The man does not live who has had any experience and would dream of building up a newspaper and making it pay its expenses, without some regard for public opinion. The most independent paper in the world is the one which recognizes no master but the public. The personal organ may be independent of the public, but it is sustained by its owners simply to give expression to their views or to advance their interests, and as soon as it is know to be a personal organ it ceases to have influence, no matter how elevated its literary and moral tone.

Intelligence from Senegal is to the effect that the French column under Col. Desbordes drove the hostile natives back, and tranquilly established themselves on the left side of the Niger.

Statistics are still coming forth in regard to the primroses used at the Beaconsfield celebration last month. The total sales in London are estimated to have brought the dealers in a sum of £4,000. A single dealer in the West End sold more than 9,000 bunches.

Among the younger members of the English bar, says the London Truth, the feeling is increasing that the only effectual step which can be taken is to permit barristers to deal directly with the public. If a man wishes a barrister to make his marriage settlement, or wants his opinion on the construction of a document, it is monstrous that he cannot carry out his wish without having the costs trebled by the intervention of a solicitor. On the other hand, it is equally ridiculous that a competent solicitor, who is well acquainted with the details of a case, cannot argue it in court, but must instruct counsel to do so. What is really wanted for nine-tenths of legal business is a lawyer, whether called barrister or solicitor, and a smart, intelligent clerk.

STONE THROWING.

Our space is too valuable to be appropriated in pointing out typographical errors in our contemporary at Flesherton, who devoted quite a space in that line last week, not however without making typo. errors in so doing.—Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones.

PIC-NIC.

A pic-nic was held on the Queen's birthday at School Section No. 6, Glenelg, and was largely attended. A programme was arranged consisting of Readings, Recitations Songs, Dialogues &c., and was exceedingly well carried out. Rev. Mr. Boyle occupied the chair, those who attended were very highly pleased with their days enjoyment. The eatables were in abundance and of the very best quality. Mr. Andrew Walker deserves special mention, having went to a great deal of trouble and expense in making provision for the enjoyment of those present.

COM.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Owen Sound district of the Methodist Church of Canada was held in Owen Sound 22nd and 23 insts., Rev. Mr. McDowell, chairman of district, Presiding; Rev. S. C. Edmunds, B. A., was appointed Secretary. The business properly coming before the meeting was dispatched with the utmost harmony. The financial state of the district is satisfactory. A. large increase on the giving of last year was voted. Our young man, Mr. S. G. Rorke, who will preach in Markdale next Sabbath morning, was recommended to the Conference as a candidate for the Ministry. The Rev. Mr. Perry was appointed representative on the Sabbath School Committee, and Rev. Mr. McDiarmid representative on the Stationing Committee.

BANQUET.

The Conservatives of Markdale gave a banquet in honor of the Conservative members for the County of Grey at the Mansion House last evening the 30th. Considering the inclemency of the weather together with the bad state of the roads there was a good turn out. At 9:30, about 60 sat down to a sumptuous spread, prepared by "Mine Host" Mr. Bryan. After doing justice in this department Mr. Neil McColeman, Reeve of Collingwood Tp., and President of the Conservative Convention of East Grey took the chair, and John Lyons Esq., of Markdale, Secretary the vice chair. Toasts were given and responded to, from the Queen all the way through to the press. (As our paper is about ready for press and space already all taken up we will have to cut short our report.) A. W. Lauder, M. P. P., Mr. Blyth, M. P. P., and T. S. Sproule, M. P., were present, also a number of leading men from various parts of the country. The best of order prevailed throughout, while there was nothing said that the most refined could take exception to.

THE QUEEN'S HEALTH.

ALARMING STATE OF HER MAJESTY'S HEALTH.

LONDON, May 28.—The Queen's condition is now known to be such as to warrant alarm even on the part of her physicians and personal attendants. The character of the illness has not been well defined beyond the point that it is of a nervous type and is not readilly controlled by ordinary remedies. Her condition has been such that for days it has been difficult to get from herself any sufficient description of the symptoms to enable the physicians to act intelligently. Her Majesty's nerveusness has become so extreme that she is frequently hysterical, and sometimes almost beyond control and bordering on delerium. On the journey to Balmoral no cheering or other exciting demonstrations were allowed. The accident to the Queen's knee is charged with resulting in the present illness. The knee sprain was secondary to the jar to the hip joint caused by the fall. The jar led to sciatica troubles, from which the royal patient suffered terribly. After all lighter means of relief had been tried the physicians were compelled to resort to hypodermic injections of morphine in order to secure Her Majesty any relief whatever. On many occasions, after great pain and loss of sleep, she has been temporarily quite beyond control. The fall, sprain, and inflammation allowed the gout, whose existence had long been known, to ascend to the hip, where the sympathy of the sciatic nerve was at once excited. Usually in persons who in other respects do not possess excellent health this is the fatal point in gout, and the physician's fear this may be the case with the Queen.

Special to STANDARD.

London, May. 31.

The Queen is at Balmoral, in good health, excepting that her knee is troubling her. Nothing alarming in her condition.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR.—For the past few weeks I have watched the numbers of the Flesherton Advance and perused them with interest, one thing I have noticed, namely, that the Editor of the Flesherton Advance took very good care not to mention, that the citizens of this village were going to celebrate Her Magesty's Birthday by horse racing, games, sports, &c. The question naturally arrises why this want of courtesy. I also observed on the 24th, that the Flesherton people were low and far between, all due credit to the Editor of that paper, as he was present on the occasion,

Yours truly,

CITIZEN

The 24th in Markdale.

As far as the weather was concerned, the Queen's Birthday was all that could be desired it being one of the finest days we have had this spring. Nearly every business place was adorned with a flag. A great many went fishing early in the morning, the most of whom returned in the forenoon and by 12 o'clock quite a large number had arrived from the country. A number went to the R'y. Station to see the monster excursion from Toronto, on their way to Owen Sound. This excursion was under the auspices of the Canadian Order of Odd Fellows of Toronto, and passed through about noon, stopping for water at this place, there were 22 cars completely packed inside and out, drawn by two heavy engines. This was the largest excursion which has ever passed over the road.

Shortly after noon the crowd made their way to the exhibition grounds, which are convenient to the village. where the horse racing and other sports took place, the course, which has been greatly improved, is now in fair order, yet the village intend still further improving the grounds and planting a large number of trees there which will make it a good driving park as well as convenient and pleasant for various other gatherings.

The horse races started a little behind but were pushed through without any unnecessary delay. The number of entries was not very large yet there was close competition in some cases, and everything passed off quietly and without an accident of any kind, except that of a man in a sulky running over a horse. After the horse races came the atheletic sports and other games, below we give the

THE BAZAAR.

The Ladies of the Methodist Church held their annual bazaar in Dufferin Hall, which was fairly attended, and those who did visit, did so apparently with the intention of transacting business, for they purchased freely of the many useful and ornamental articles there exhibited, the display this year was ahead of former years, and before night very little was left.

THE CONCERT.

The evening entertainment was a rich treat. Rev. Mr. McDiarmid occupied the chair and after referring to the past three years (his term on this circuit,) the many social gatherings which he had enjoyed during that period, and this being in all probability the last, at least for a number of years, he proceeded with the programme. There was music by the Choir; Music (both Vocal and Instrumental) by Miss Miller, of Toronto; Duet, "Drift my Bark," by the Misses Ford; Reading, "Aunt Hetty on Matrimony," by Mrs. Wm. Brown; Song, "Larboard Watch," by Messrs. Mason & Hill; Song, "The Beautiful Daisies, by Mrs. Turner; "The old man goes to town, by Miss. Trevorrow; Duet and Song by Mrs. Hill & Potter; Song, "Were I the Fairest little Flower," Mrs. Trimble; Song, Mr. Reynolds; Reading, J. Richards, and a sermon on "Old Mother Hubbard," by Master Wm. Dinwoody. The above named persons did no discredit to themselves on the platform. Miss Miller showed rare ability at the organ, both as to voice and instrumental music, and though she appeared four times, would have been further listened to with pleasure by the audience, had it been their privilege. Mrs. Brown's reading was highly appreciated, as also was Mrs. Trimble's song, Miss Trevorrow displayed rare ability in her efforts which were very highly appreciated, and brought tears to many an eye. Master Dinwoody brought down the house completely, and was with difficulty permitted to proceed owing to the roars of laughter, we hope he will come again. We haven't room to particularize each, suffice it to say that everyone did good service, and their efforts were highly appreciated by the large gathering of very respectable listeners.

During an intermission, which took place about the middle of the programme, a beautiful five story cake with a gold engagement ring inside, was cut and sold, while Orange and Lemon ade was also indulged in. Mr. Samuel Coleman, a reputed bachelor of our town, was the lucky one who got the ring.

This very pleasant and much enjoyed evening's entertainment was brought to a close by the audience singing in a right loyal manner, the National Anthem.

Proceeds of the Bazaar and concert, $136

The ladies who have toiled so faithfuly and with such indomitable energy from year to year for the purpose of raising funds to wipe out the debt on the parsonage, are entitled to at least the very warmest thanks of the Trustees and congregation, and if they do not receive them in so many, words, we are confident they have them in thought.

Our Stock of Grockery and Glassware is unusually large and well assorted. See our Breakfast Sets, Dinner Sets, Tea Sets, Bedroom Sets, Toilet Sets and an enormous assertment of odds and ends wanted by every one.

In HARDWARE

We keep a first class assortment of Table and Pocket Cutlery from the best makers. A large stock of Forks, Spades, Shovels, Hoes and other tools of the best quality.

In the crowded condition of our store it is just impossible to keep everything in view, and if you don't see what you want please ask for it, as we are almost sure to have it.

After Stock Taking and filling up our Mammoth Stock we are now better than ever before in a position to supply anything and everything to be found in a first class establishment.

Though some of our competitors seem to be nervously anxious as to our position and future prospects, yet though we are not in business in Markdale for the post 20 years, though we were not here under the old regime when good honest farmers bought goods at exorbitant prices at long credit, and in many cases settled the account by a mortgage on the house, though we have not made a fortune out of the (miss)fortune of others, yet we are practical business men, trained to the business, who have done business in this section of country for some years, have always paid 100c in the dollar, have always found sufficent capital at our command to serve us, and while we feel ourselves under the most overwhelming obligation to those who have shown much interest in our welfare, we would most humbly state that we feel capable of "Paddling our own canoe," and maintaining the reputation gained for our house as the cheapest place to buy goods in this section of country. We claim to be able to sell CHEAPER than any other house in the County and in support of this position submit the following reasons:—

1st We give no credit. 2nd We loose nothing by bad debts.
3rd We do not let out our money. 4th We pay no book-keeper's salary.
5th We pay no collector's fees. 6th We give our attention solely to our business
7th We work ourselves and pay no large salaries to managers, salesmen &c.
8th We are always to be found in our business place in business hours.
9th Selling for cash we buy for cash and give our customers the benefit.
10th We attend all trade sales.
11th We are always open to purchase good bankrupt stocks.
12th Being well known in this department we are always posted, and are constantly securing enormous bargains.
13th We make it a point to keep just what the people want thus securing a lively trade and holding no dead stock.

We now stand prepared to convince all who may favor us with a fair trial that they can save money by dealing with us. We buy 25 to 50 per cent cheaper than on the ordinary system, run our business economically, and can therefore afford to sell correspondingly cheap. Our customers' interests and our own being identical we are determined to supply the best and cheapest goods in town. Call and see for yourself.

Markdale, May 30th, 1883. TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

Doll & Brown

As Mr. Doll is leaving Markdale to go into the Wholesale Jewellery Business in Toronto, (not wishing to leave Markdale altogether,) he has entered into partnership with Mr. W. BROWN, late of Flesherton, who is a practical watchmaker and jeweller of over 15 years experience, and comes with the best recommendations from some of the leading watchmakers in the Dominion.

Mr. Brown will carry on the business in Markdale.

All work entrusted to him will be done in a workmanlike manner.

All work will be guaranteed, and all goods sold will be found as represented, or money refunded.

A very extensive fire occurred last Monday, at Uxbridge, in which over $30,000 worth of property was destroyed. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

Mr. Robert Wright, of Artemesia, near Vandeleur, brought a fine two year old Durham bull by train, on Tuesday last, he took him to his home the same evening.

J. P. Brown, L. D. S. of Woodstock, will be in Markdale after May 15th for 3 weeks. Parties wishing first class dental work at reasonable rates, will be carefully attended to. Gold filling a specialty, satisfaction guaranteed. Office at Doll & Brown's jewellery store.

LOSS OF JEWELLERY.—Mr. Doll, a jeweller of Markdale, had a valise containing a quantity of Jewellery taken from him at the Union Depot, Toronto, on Saturday. It appears he left the valise in a car in which he was about to leave the city, while he went out on the platform for a few minutes. When he returned his valise was missing. Besides some clothing it contained a number of valuable gold and silver watches, rings, and chains.—Toronto's Globe.

The Methodists of Williamsford circuit, have announced by bills, their annual pic-nic to be held near the above place on Wednesday the 6th June, they will have refreshments of various kinds, also music by the following Reverend gentlemen, McDiarmid, of Markdale; Chatsworth; Edge, Paisley; Woodford, and the resident minister. Pic-nic to commence at 2 o'clock sharp. Tickets 25cts.

The latest arrival—a stock of goods at Doll & Brown's.

There is a very perceptable improvement in the Hanover Post since it changed hads two weeks ago.

Glenelg Tp. is the first to send in their copy for Voters List, for 1883. It will be ready for distribution by the 15th of June next.

Quite a number from Toronto and elsewhere, have been sporting themselves fishing round Markdale recently, and have in most cases made a good catch.

We understand it is the intention of our city fathers to complete the sidewalk to the station together with other repairs as soon as statute labor commences, which will be shortly.

Christ church grounds have been very nicely arranged and beautified, walks made and flowers planted, making them very attractive. Rev. Mr. Ward deserves great credit for his taste in keeping the church surroundings so neat and in such order.

ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday, a horse belonging to Wm. Haskett, took fright at the cars while in the station yard and ran to mill street, then turning up the railway track fell in the cattle guard breaking his leg at the fetlock joint. Mr. Haskett had the foot bandaged and hopes of the recovery of the horse are now entertained, he is a fine driving beast.

We are in receit of a copy of a neat and spicy paper, the 'Moosegaw News,' from Robert Kells, son of Thos. Kells, Esq., of Artemesia, who has pitched his tent in that rising city, on the C. P. Ry. This paper is dated the 11th day of May, at which time there were in the place over 100 buildings, while two months previous there was but two solitary houses. We are pleased to know that Robert is doing well in the N. W. and have no doubt that he will make his mark up there.

ANOTHER FIRE SCARE.—On Tuesday about 5 p. m. the alarm of fire was given, when the woodshed of Mr. Gill, on Mill Street, was found in a blaze. Had it not been for the well directed efforts of our citizens who were on hand in good time, together with a good supply of water, the damage would have been much more serious, as it was the fire was confined to the shed, which was consumed. The fire originated from a dish of ashes emptied in the woodshed by a little child. Mr. Gill recently purchased the property and has no insurance on the house, and though not an expensive one, he could ill afford to loose it. He is a very industrious citizen, a painter by trade.

The English Church Sunday Schools of Markdale and Maxwell will have a grand excursion to Toronto on the 6th DAY OF JUNE. Fare $1.50 for round trip, children under 15 60cts.

THE MAN IN POSSESSION.

IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER V.

Once safe in London, I speedily sought out and engaged a temporary lodging for Miss Wintock. Next, I proceeded to wait on my chief, to whom I rendered a faithful account of what had transpired; and who, far from blaming me, was pleased to commend my conduct highly. I knew the solicitor who always transacted his law business.

"Do you think, sir," I asked respectfully, "that I had better go to Mr. Wrightly, or can you advise me of any one better?"

"Wait on old Wrightly at once," was his reply, highly pleased at my asking his counsel. "He is as sharp as a ferret and as persistent as a leech."

Jumping into the first cab I met, another half-hour saw me in Mr. Wrightly's office.

I need not detail the steps which eventually led to the recovery of the greater part of Miss Wintock's property. Sufficient to state that the astute old lawyer at once undertook her case, conducting it with a perseverance and skill seldom surpassed; and that also, while matters were in progress, he very kindly and thoughtfully provided her with a safe retreat, by receiving her into his own house and family. At first, the Wintocks threatened proceedings against me on account of the mare and gig; but these they were soon glad to forego, for the shrewd old practitioner at once commenced the battle, and they had much more important interests to engage their attention. It was, however, about two years before things were finally settled. During the early part of that time, I called once or twice, at her own request, to see Miss Wintock, and she had by degrees drawn from me much of my past history.

Long before the expiration of that two years alluded to I had, however, bidden farewell to my occupation as a bailiff, for one morning my chief called me aside. "Meredith," said he, "here is a note from Mr. Wrightly, requesting me to send you to him immediately."

"Good-morning, Mr. Meredith," said the latter, as I entered the little private room at his chambers in which he usually sat to receive clients. "Take a chair. I want a word or two with you. I have been given to understand that you were formerly employed in the law. Is it so?"

I began to blush and stammer, for I could not for the life of me guess what was coming.

"Ah, well! I see; committed yourself. Never mind. Do you like your present vocation, eh?—Not particularly enthusiastic in it," he continued, in his sharp shrewd way of speaking. "Very good. Glad of it."

I bowed, for I had literally nothing to reply.

"Now, young man," and he fixed his keen gray eyes searchingly upon me, "I can perfectly comprehend a hot-brained inexperienced youth sowing his wild-oats, and afterwards reaping the bitter crop, too often throughout his after-life. But your conduct in Warley's affair has given me a favorable impression of your character and disposition; and I am induced to hope that with the energy you evidently possess, you may yet accomplish better things.—Stay!" he said, raising his hand, seeing that I was about to answer. "Hear me out. I conclude, from the few scraps of your history which I have heard, that you have received a genteel education. Indeed, your manners indicate that you have not always occupied your present position in society. Had you the opportunity of regaining your former status among your fellow-men—on your word as a man, would you do your best to retain it?"

His words fell upon my ears clear, cold, and calm, yet melodious as the ring of a silver bell. I sprang to my feet. The gorgeous sunshine was gleaming with golden rays through the narrow window of that little room, tinting with hues of gladness even the piles of musty deeds that lay ranged upon its shelves. I felt its loving warmth strike to my inmost heart, as I stood erect before him with quivering lip, vainly struggling to force out the glad words of thanks that would not come, for my emotion was too deep for utterance. Could it really be that there was yet one more chance for me of hope in life? for my present existence, passed in a low and degrading occupation, that I thoroughly hated, could not be termed living.

Mr. Wrightly perceived my agitation. "Enough!" said he with a smile, and waving his hand. "Sit down again and compose yourself. Actions shall speak for you in the future; I like them better than words.—There is just at this time a vacancy in my office; the post is open to your acceptance. Fill it worthily; it is the first step on the ladder. In due time you may rise to competence at least, if not to eminence. Uprightness, energy, and perseverance—you know the rest.—There: no thanks. I owe you some recompense for bringing me a good client."

How my heart bounded within me as I left Mr. Wrightly's presence! I could not resist the conclusion that Miss Wintock's representations had influenced him. Doubtless, she wished to repay me in some way for my services. What nobler offering could she present me than the opportunity of redeeming myself, and regaining my former social status?

"And John Meredith will prove himself not unworthy of her kindness!" I exclaimed, as I threw myself upon my couch for the night, to dream of the past, present, and improbable future, mingled in inextricable confusion: for amid the tempest of conflicting emotions, a second hope had flashed momentarily, like a brilliant meteor, upon my unhinged mind. I dared not breathe it even to myself, far less encourage it. Vainly I tried to banish the remembrance of Miss Wintock from my senses. Mr. Wrightly's residence was some distance from his chambers. Sometimes I had to wait upon him there, and occasionally saw her for an instant. Her kindly grasp of the hand, with occasionally a few words of friendly interest, had served to feed and fan the flame that was smouldering in my breast; and yet I felt that my case was utterly hopeless, because of the gap between our relative social positions.

During Miss Wintock's stay at Mr. Wrightly's, a Major Courtly became a constant visitor. It began to be whispered that as soon as her affairs were settled, he would be openly acknowledged as her accepted suitor. When first I heard the news, every faculty seemed for the moment paralyzed. Then I woke to the depth and intensity of the feeling I entertained for her. That night, in my chamber, I cast myself on the floor in a wild tempest of passion, grief, and despair.

A few weeks after the trial—which resulted in her favor—was over, it was currently reported among our clerks that Miss Wintock would shortly leave Mr. Wrightly's family for an establishment of her own in the country. I felt it was good for me that it should be so. My idol removed from immediate proximity, I hoped to regain by degrees equanimity and composure of mind. Happiness was not to be expected, for the mainspring of a joyful life was broken.

One morning I was in my accustomed place at the chambers, gloomily poring over a deed entrusted to me by Mr. Wrightly, when a perfumed billet was laid on my desk by one of the juniors. It ran thus:

"Miss Wintock presents her kindest compliments to Mr. Meredith. Probably he is aware that she is about to leave town for Briteleigh Hall the day after to-morrow. She would therefore be pleased to see him any time this evening. She cannot help feeling rather surprised that he is the very last of her friends to congratulate her upon her good fortune."

"Well, I'll go and have it over," I soliloquised. "Little does she guess the agony of mind to which it will subject me."

I went. Punctually as the clock struck seven, I was ushered into the library. Miss Wintock and Miss Wrightly were sitting together, each with a book. Miss Wrightly was charming. But my every sense and feeling became absorbed and entranced in the contemplation of her friend. She had always appeared to me strikingly handsome even under the unfavorable circumstances of her captivity; but now, she dazzled me with the brightness of her queenly beauty. Time, repose, communion with congenial spirits, had combined to develop her form and perfect her lovely face. She might have sat for a model in ancient Greece.

"Good evening, Mr. Meredith. I am so glad to see you once more before leaving London. But what a recreant knight! We have neither heard nor seen anything of you since the day of our triumph."

I murmured very confusedly something about not liking to intrude upon her.

"Oh, nonsense! You were not such a coward on a certain night which I shall ever well remember. And yet I have been very busy indeed, or I should have sent for you earlier. Now you are come, we must have a little chat. So, take a chair, and make yourself at home."

I sat down, and we talked awhile, Miss Wrightly occasionally joining in the conversation. By degrees I overcame my embarrassment. We chatted of the past, of our hairbreadth escape, and of the trial; and then I took the opportunity of thanking her most gratefully for her interest with Mr. Wrightly on my behalf.

She raised her delicate hand with an imperative gesture of displeasure. "Mr. Meredith, I do not wish to hear a word about that. You have only to thank your own noble conduct. I always felt, from the first moment you befriended me, that you were in heart, as in bearing, a gentleman."

Other desultory conversation followed, and soon afterwards I rose to take my leave.

"Stay one moment longer,' she requested, as she tripped across the room to a little cabinet. "I have a little trifle here for your acceptance; you must not go away without it.—There!" she added, as she placed in my hand a splendidly executed miniature of herself. "You will not refuse to wear this as a memento of your services to me."

I bent over it and kissed it fervently, and also the snow-white hand that she placed in mine to bid me farewell.

"And now, Mr. Meredith, good-bye! Let me hear now and then of your welfare. You will perhaps leave town for a few days' holiday. Whenever you may chance or choose to come in the neighborhood of Briteleigh Hall, remember I shall expect a call from you.—Nay; no excuses. I command it!" She spoke with a bewitching imperiousness that awed and fascinated me.

"Miss Wintock," I stammered, "I shall be most happy—most delighted to—to; but perhaps—I fear"——

Gazing upon me for an instant with a fixed look of astonishment—"But perhaps what?" she asked.

"Miss Wintock, I appreciate your kindness far more highly than any poor words of mine can express; but, in fact, I dare not trust myself. It is for me extremely painful to decline your kindly meant invitation; but it would be even more painful for me to accept it: and it is quite possible," I blurted out, scarcely knowing what I said, "that Major Courtly might not entirely approve of my doing so."

Both ladies regarded me with looks of puzzled wonder, as if they thought I was going distraught.

"Major Courtly!" each involuntary repeated very slowly and in the same breath. The next moment both burst into a simultaneous peal of merriment; and Miss Wrightly, with both hands to her face to conceal her confusion, hurried out of the room. Miss Wintock was the first to recover her composure. For myself, I was completely confounded, and stood speechless.

"Mr. Meredith," she gravely replied, "this is a serious matter, though I have been silly enough to laugh at it. What can Major Courtly have to do with your giving me a friendly call now and then at my own residence, if I choose to entertain you?"

"I—I thought that he had a right to—I have heard that you were"——

"Major Courtly is the affianced suitor of Miss Wrightly, the lady who has just left the room," she quickly interrupted. "What next?"

There was a mischievous archness in her glance. It flashed upon my mind that she half suspected my secret. I lost all self-command. Out it came in a headlong torrent of words that would not be controlled. In the frenzy that shook me, I had taken her hand in mine, when she gave me one startled look, and with her face averted, stood motionless as a statue, her color alternately fading from crimson to the pallor of swooning, and then as quickly flushing to the brightest crimson again. I told her all—of the love first kindled while she bent over me by dim candle-light in her dark prison-chamber—how, through the long dreary months which had since elapsed, it had gathered intensity, until it had become the quintessence of my existence—how that, realizing the impassable gulf that yawned between her station and mine, I had resolved to come and bid her farewell; and then to see her no more, but to bury my secret within my breast for ever, and bear my burden as best I might. Bending for an instant over the hand that, cold as marble, still rested in my own, I raised it passionately to my lips, and was about to rush from the apartment, when a sudden dizziness seemed to overtake her. But for my assistance she would have fallen to the floor.

I was sobered in an instant, horrified at the consequences of my own impetuosity as I conveyed her to the sofa. I was about to ring the bell for assistance, when she languidly opened her eyes. "Do not ring, at least for a minute or two; I shall be better presently.—A little water"—pointing to the table.

I hastened to comply; but my hand trembled so violently that I could scarcely help her, as, kneeling on one knee, I raised it to her lips. "Oh!" I cried, "forgive me, Miss Wintock, the alarm and pain I have caused you." I believed that intense terror at my excited manner and speech, commingled with anger at my effrontery, had caused her to swoon. "I will summon Miss Wrightly, and never intrude my hateful presence upon you again. Would that my tongue had been"——

She laid her hand gently on my arm. "Do not speak, please; I cannot talk yet."

She sat for some minutes without moving or speaking, and with her eyes cast down. Presently, a few pearly drops began to steal gently from under the dark pencilled eyelashes. For my own part, I scarcely dared to breathe. At last the color began slowly to tint her cheeks. Suddenly, she removed her hand from my arm, and with a great effort stood erect. "John Meredith," she said, "I know you to be brave; I believe you to be sincere. Tell me solemnly—was that your whole mind and soul, or only a mistaken feeling of enthusiasm in parting with a dear friend?"

"Dearest Miss Wintock, it was indeed my whole mind and soul, my"——

"Then take me to your heart, John! Be my protector through life, as you have been my gallant delivery from worse than death."

It was not until some time afterwards that I left the house. Miss Wrightly did not return to the library; and we sat sweetly conversing of the bitter past, the joyful present, and the hopeful future. At length the supper-bell warned us that we must part, and I tore myself away, once more to dream—but this time blissfully—of Maria Wintock.

A few months later, we had a quiet wedding in the metropolis, Mr. Wrightly officiating as father, and his daughter as one of the bridesmaids. But at Briteleigh my lovely bride was received with a hearty ovation, the villagers turning out en masse to meet and welcome her. New servants had been appointed to the Hall, and there was a jovial spread at the Three Nags for the tenants and workpeople on the estate, including the friendly landlord and landlady of the inn where we spent that memorable night; nor did her liberal hand forget the aged and the poor in the village itself.

THE END.

A CUNNING ELEPHANT.

Steals His Keeper's Cookies and Turns His Back on the Theft.

The highest mental faculties are more developed in the elephant than in any other animal, except the dog and the monkey. The general fact that elephants are habitually employed in parts of India for storing timber, building, etc., shows a high level of docile intelligence. But perhaps in no labor in which they are employed do they display a more wonderful sagacity than in helping to catch wild elephants. A herd of wild elephants is driven into a corral, and two tame ones ridden in among them. Two decoys will crowd up on either side of a wild one, and protect the nooser until a rope is fast around the wild elephant's leg, when the tame one, to whose collar the other end of the rope is fastened, will draw the captive out and wind the rope round a tree, while the other decoy prevents any interference from the herd, and pushes the captive toward the tree, thus enabling the first one to take in the slack of the rope. The conduct of the tame ones during all these proceedings is truly wonderful. They display the most perfect conception of every movement, both of the object to be attained and of the means to accomplish it. On one occasion, in tying up a large elephant, he contrived, before he could be hauled close up to the tree, to walk once or twice around it, carrying the rope with him; the decoy, perceiving the advantage he had thus gained over the nooser, walked up of her own accord and pushed him backwards with her head till she made him unwind himself again; upon which the rope was hauled tight and made fast.

One could almost fancy there was a display of dry humor in the manner in which the decoys thus play with the fears of the wild herd, and make light of their efforts at resistance. When reluctant they shove them forward, when violent they drive them back; when the wild ones throw themselves down, the tame ones butt them with the head and shoulders and force them up again; and, when it is necessary to keep them down, they kneel upon them, and prevent them from rising till the ropes are secured.

A remarkable degree of cunning was displayed by an elephant who had been chained to a tree, and whose driver had made an oven at a short distance in which to put some rice-cake to bake. The man covered his cakes with stone and grass and went away. When he was gone the elephant with his trunk unfastened the chain round his foot, went to the oven and uncovered it, took out the cakes, recovered the oven with the stone and grass as before, and went back to his place. He could not fasten the chain again around his own feet, so he twisted it round and round it, in order to look the same, and when the driver returned the elephant was standing with his back to the oven. The driver went for his cakes, discovered the theft, and, looking round, caught the elephant's eye as he looked back over his shoulder out of the corner of it. Instantly he detected the culprit, and condign punishment followed. — Popular Science Monthly.

Bachelors' Buttons.

Did you ever see a man in the solitude and privacy of his study attempt to sew on a button himself? It is in all its details one of the most interesting performances in the world.

First he hunts for a button. Generally to secure it he robs Peter to pay Paul, and cuts one from another garment. This button may be much larger than the size he is wearing. Next he hunts for a needle. Probably he goes out and buys a paper of needles. He always chooses the largest needles, having the impression that large needles will sew stronger than small needles. As to thread, he gets the coarsest he can find, and this he doubles. He would thread his needle. He takes his big needle in one hand and his coarse black thread in the other. He bites off thread to the desirable length. Then he tries to twist it to a fine point. Generally, in this he succeeds in making two and sometimes three fine points of one end. Of course he can't get all these points through the needle's eye at once. He tries hard to make that needle and thread get on friendly terms with each other. Sometimes it is the needle that kicks; sometimes the thread. Sometimes he imagines he has threaded his needle. It is an ocular delusion. The thread has missed the needle's eye by half an inch. It is harder work than sawing wood.

At last the needle is threaded. Now he tries to sew the buttons without taking his trousers off. This proves a failure. He twists himself into an uncomfortable position, and so would sew. But he can't sew. He runs the needle into himself. And the contrary threads always insists on fouling or on doubling on the next button. Then one part of the double thread won't work harmoniously with the other part, one part draws through the button's eye first and leaves the other part behind. Then it gets hitched up, and the ambassador swears. Or the needle breaks. He has forgotten all about the necessity of a thimble. He jams his thumb down into the needle and it punctures his thumb or runs under the nail. By-and-by he sews the button's eye full of thread. His big needle won't pass through any more. He must stop. He ends by winding the thread as many times as it will go under the button. And perhaps he leaves off with two or three inches of thread sticking outside. A woman can, through many outward indications, tell when a man has been trying to sew on a button. He doesn't know the shibboleth of needle and thread, and it catches somewhere every time. At last the button is sewed on and he is proud of his work.

Cities Warmer than the Country.

Those who happen to live at a little distance from the heart of the city, says Science, must frequently have noticed a lack of accord between the readings of their own standard thermometers and the published observations of the signal service observer of their locality. The reason of the discord is plain—viz., the perturbing action of the heat which the city emits; and, however gratifying it may be to the outsider to find himself superior to the Government observers, it is very little to the credit of the weather bureau that this particular source of error was not long since recognized and avoided. The remarks of Prof. Whitney on this subject, as applied to observations made at London, are pertinent and convincing. He says: "It is a well-known fact that cities are considerably warmer than the more thinly-inhabited country, otherwise under similar climatic conditions. Statistics prove this to be true; and there could be no doubt that such would be the effect of an immense aggregation of population within a limited space, even if there were no statistics bearing on this question. Many millions of tons of coal are burned in and about London during every year, and the whole mass of brick of which the city is built is heated during the entire Winter, and more or less in the Summer, many degrees above the natural temperature. There can be no question that conditions such as are here indicated vitiate all observations made in or near large cities, with a view to the determination of any possible secular variation of the temperature."

Gathering and Drying Tea in Japan.

Tea gathering is commenced in May. Girls are employed, at an average of five cents a day, from sunrise to sunset. The sprig of leaves is nipped off carefully with the finger nails and deposited in a basket, and other servants carry these baskets, as they are filled, to the tea planter's house and necessary out-houses. Here other employees spread them out on large palm mats and here the first and only adulteration essayed by the tea planter is executed. Having decided the percentage of exhausted leaves to mix with his fresh leaves these are put also on the mats. The drying is in the open air and in the sunlight. That having been completed, the next operation is the curling. To effect this the dried leaves are poured into open cast-iron receptacles over a charcoal furnace beneath of accurately graded heat. Sufficient laborers are placed around these pans to constantly take in their hands the leaves as they become heated and to roll them. When the curling is done the leaves are packed in coarse, cheap boxes, freighted to the nearest tea market and there sold to a foreign tea dealer. Every foreigner keeps a special variety of tea-taster, who has to tell the quality of the fresh leaf and to make a guess at the amount of leaves that have already done service.

Preaching and Practicing.

Several years ago Miss Cynthia L. Cleveland was a meek and efficient dress-maker at Pontaic. Then her soul was fired in the temperance cause, and she became one of the most efficient Gospel temperance workers in Michigan, and as such was favorably known throughout the entire State. Two or three years ago she went to Dakota, where she likewise became famed in the anti-beer and anti-whisky cause, becoming President of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, if, indeed, she was not its originator. Less than a year ago she was admitted to the Bar, being the first lady to enjoy that high distinction in Dakota. A short time ago she had her first case in court, and, stranger than fiction, it was the defence of a woman on trial for selling liquor without a license—and she won her case.

Mr. Bryce on England and Ireland.

In the June Century, Professor James Bryce, M. P., discusses the Irish question in a singularly fair spirit and with perfect mastery of the facts. What might be called the sentimental obstacles to harmony between the countries are explained in part as follows: "The English government of Ireland is practically a foreign government. The Irish may say that it ought not to be so, but not be so, because after all the two islands form one kingdom, owe allegiance to a queen who is directly queen of the one as of the other, are governed by a popular assembly in which representatives of Ireland—representatives more numerous than her population and wealth entitle her to—sit and speak freely, and more than free. Nevertheless, people in Ireland still think and talk of the Government, not as 'the Government,' but as 'the English Government.' It seems to them an external power set in motion by forces they do not control, conducted on principles which may or may not be good, but which are not their principles. Unquestionably there is much truth in such a view. One need only listen to an Irish debate in the House of Commons to recognize it. And one must further admit that the English are not merely foreigners, but by no means gracious and agreeable foreigners, to deal with. In spite of their many virtues, partly because of some of their virtues and especially of their passion for improving people and things, the English do not make themselves liked by other nations, not even in India, where they are honestly doing their best for the natives. They are too stiff, too dry, too unsympathetic, too much disposed to make their own habits and customs the universal standard of right. Towards races which they think their inferiors they are less often cruel and unjust than most European peoples. But they are contemptuous or, at best, condescending. They do not allow the subject to forget that he is not only a subject but an inferior. Their very indifference to his opinion of them is the most conspicuous evidence of their pride. Between them and the Irish there is a sort of incompatibility like that which exists between the German and the Slav. It is true that they do not hate the Irish as the Germans hate the Slavs, and as the Lowland Scotch hate the Celtic Highlanders, even so recently as in the days of Thomas Carlyle's youth. An Englishman is not sensible of any antipathy to the individual Irishman; and it need not be said that an individual Irishman has every chance, and uses it, of success in England. In the professions of arms and law, in medicine, in the church, in literature and science, many of the leading men of modern Britain are Irish by birth or education. Irishmen with their Irish quality, perhaps even their Irish speech bewraying them. But for Ireland as a whole, or for any party of Irishmen associating themselves as Irishmen, the English have a feeling which, if not dislike, is at least distrust, and which, though hardly to be called contemptuous, is certainly not respectful. An Irishman who is content to be even as an Englishman is received on the same footing. But Irishmen who obtrude their Hibernian character and nationality are ill-regarded. Irish patriotism is thought ridiculous. 'What have they to be proud of?' says the Englishman; 'why cannot they leave that sense alone, and be satisfied to be members of the great United Kingdom?'"

The Late Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the long roll of Primates of all England who have made Lambeth their home few names will be remembered with more reverence and affection than that of the late archbishop, Dr. Tait. He knew much of personal sorrow, and the readers of that tender and touching book, the memorial of "Catherine and Crauford Tait," compiled partly by the husband and father himself, remember Mrs. Tait's own account of the affliction which befell them in 1856, when her husband was Dean of Carlisle, of the deaths of five lovely little daughters in as many weeks. And yet he lived a comparatively happy life. English history, the Church knew no better times, in which its head needed to be more strong, true, broad man that he was. In the words of one writer, that "his kindness, wisdom, and moderation entitle him to the lasting gratitude of the English Church," may be truly cited as expressing the general opinion of his labors. In his own home at Croydon and at Lambeth he appeared, among the daughters left to him a loving father and a most gentle one. I heard him speak of Garfield's death in the pulpit of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. I thought it the noblest and most touching utterance made on that theme in England. In his death-bed he remained still among the work that was given him to do, and his last efforts were directed to the successful tact to the removal of one of the difficulties in the way of reconciliation of the two churches in the church. To the new Primate, Dr. Benson, who comes from vigorous and valuable work in his see of Truro, he has left that best of legacies—the fruits of the life of a man who was both good and wise.—Mrs. Z. B. GUSTAFSON, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Making Gold Rings.

Gold rings are made from bars nineteen inches long. A bar fifteen inches long, about two inches wide and three-sixteenths of an inch thick, was worth $1,000. It would make 300 four-penny weight rings. A dozen processes and twenty minutes of time are required to change the bar into unchantable rings. A pair of shears cuts the bar into strips. By the turn of a wheel one, two, or three times, the guillotine-like blade of the shears chops the bar into one, two, or three-sixteenths of an inch wide. A rolling machine presses out the strips and makes them flat and smooth. Each strip is then put under the blow-pipe and annealed. The oxide of copper comes off the surface and is put into a pickle of sulphuric acid, the bit of gold is stamped with its quality and the name of the maker, and is put through a machine that bends it to the shape of a ring, the same machine making a ring of any size. The ends are soldered with an alloy of inferior fineness to the quality of the ring. Many people imagine that rings are run in a mold because they can't see where they are soldered. The ring spins through the turning lather, first with tripoli and then with steel filings and rouge. They are now ready for the market and matrimony.

CURIOUS FACTS.

An Atlanta, Ga., sight the other day was a cart drawn by a team of tame alligators.

Mrs. Thomas Payne, the bride of a Pierce, W. Va., clergyman, is only 11 years old.

A shower of small pebbles that continued fifteen minutes fell in Watseka, Ill., recently.

A lump of coal weighing three tons was recently mined in Trout Run, Mercer, Co.,

One hundred negro me in Oktibbeha County, Miss., were asked to name the President of the United States and not one could tell.

During the recent tides portion of the wreck of the ship "Cæsar," wrecked at Carlside, a century ago, have been exposed, the storms having driven away the sands, etc, by which it had been covered.

The borers of an artesian well in San Bernardino, Cal, have encountered at the depth of 280 feet a tree which stands perpendicularly. Great pieces of the wood, which appears to be sycamore, are brought up in the pipes.

A Columbus, Ga., man dreamed that all his out-houses on his brother's places in Chambers County, Ala., were destroyed by incendiary fire. The next day he received a letter from his brother giving an account of the burning of the property just as he had dreamed.

Philologists say that the "Eenty, meenty, mony, mo," and "Eny, meeny, mony, mo," which children use for counting in one of their games, and which are commonly considered gibberish, are in reality the sole survival of the languages spoken by the earliest inhabitants of the British Isles.

In the Upper Palatinate of Bavaria it is common, or was recently, to hear the moon spoken of as Frau Sonne, and the moon as Herr Mond. But yet more strange than this is the fact that in the same district the custom should still survive, which accounts, in the following common-place but suggestive way, for the genders of the luminaries in question: The moon and sun were man and wife, but the moon proving too cold a lover and too much addicted to sleep, his wife one day laid him a wager by virtue of which the agent of shining by day should belong in future to whichever of them should be the first to awake. The moon laughed, but accepted the wager, and awoke next day to find that the sun had for two hours already been lighting up the world. As it was also the condition and consequence of their agreement that unless they awoke at the same time they should shine at different times, the effect of the wager was a permanent separation, much to the affliction of the unfortunate sun, who, still retaining a terrible love for her husband was and always is trying to repair the matrimonial breach. Eclipses are really due to their efforts for the purpose of reconciliation; but as the pair always begin with mutual reproaches, the time comes for them to part before they have ceased to quarrel; and on account the sun goes away blood-red with anger, and the tears of blood she weeps at departure are often marked in the dewy early setting sun.

Nature in Siberia.

The history of animal and vegetable life in Siberia," says our author, "is a very curious one. For eight months out of the twelve every trace of vegetable life is completely hidden under a blanket six feet thick of snow, which effectually covers every bush and bush—trees there are none to be seen. During six months of this time, at least, animal life is only traceable by the tracks of a reindeer or a fox on the snow, or the occasional appearance of the raven flying low as it wanders about the limits of the vegetable growth, where it has retired for the winter. For two months in midwinter the sun never rises above the horizon, and even then it only reflects only the fitful light of the moon, the stars, or the aurora borealis. Early in February the sun only appears on the scene for a few minutes each day, but it retires. Day by day he stays out more and more, until March, April and May have passed away, when for three months night has become continuous day. Early in June the sun just touches the horizon at midnight, but does not set for some time. At midsummer days are hot enough to melt ice, but they glance harmlessly off the snow, and for a few days you have a glorious day of unbroken day in midsummer.

Then comes the south wind, and often in the course of the year takes place when the great rivers breaks up, and the earth absorbs the heat of the never-setting sun; quietly but swiftly vegetable life awakens from its long sleep, and for three months a hot Summer produces a most splendid flora, like an English flower garden run wild, and a profusion of alpine flowers, which sometimes for a day or two are cold and rain down from the Arctic regions."—Chambers' Journal.

The practice of chewing the betel nut, known in China, is carried among the Malays to great excess, the betel nut being to the Malay what opium is to the Chinese, or tobacco to the Japanese. Miss Bird, a recent traveller, condemns it as "a disgusting habit," and the account she gives of it seems to be nothing less. If a man engaged in chewing betel nut speaks during the process, his mouth looks as if it was full of blood. It blackens the teeth, moreover, and the Malays say, with a certain superficial accuracy, that to have white teeth is to be like a beast.

Ever since the removal of the remains of the great Napoleon from St. Helena to the Hotel de Invalides it has been the invariable custom to solemnize mass on May 5, the anniversary of his death, in the chapel beneath the dome under which his ashes repose. This year, however, a practice that has prevailed for nearly half a century has been omitted, Gen. Thibaudin, the Minister of War, having forbidden the Abbe de Cassan, the venerable chaplain of the Invalides, to perform any service in commemoration of the death of the founder of the Napoleonic dynasty.

FARM WORK.

June.

Corn.—Weeds grow rapidly in the cornfield and should be kept down by frequent working. Do as much of this labor as possible with the horse-hoe or cultivator.

Potatoes.—The Colorado beetle is the leading enemy to the potato. It can be successfully fought with Paris green or London purple, if the poison is used so soon as the young "worms" make their appearance. The ground must be well stirred and free from weeds, and the crop dug early to avoid the wet rot.

Roots are a leading crop in English farming, and ought to be more extensively grown with us. All roots, mangels, turnips, carrots, etc., do best on a deep, rich, loose soil. They require the soil ploughed to the depth of ten inches, and if the subsoil plough loosens up the bottom of each furrow for several inches, it is all the better. Nothing is superior to well-rotted barn-yard manure spread evenly over the surface before ploughing. In the absence of this 300 to 500 pounds of guano or superphosphate may be spread on the ploughed ground, and thoroughly harrowed in. Before sowing, smooth the surface with the back of the harrow, or otherwise. In light soil the rows may be two feet apart, with the plants thinned to ten inches in the rows. In strong, rich soil, these distances should be somewhat increased. This is known as the "flat system." The system of "ridging" requires more labor, but economizes manures. After the soil is thoroughly ploughed and pulverized furrows are struck out with a small plough about 2½ feet apart and six inches deep. Well-rotted manure is stamped down evenly in the furrows and covered by a plough run along each side. The tops of the ridges are broadened by a roller, thus allowing the seed to work easily. It is claimed that the gradual removal of the soil from the plants by cultivation in the ridge system is beneficial. The Swedish or ruta-baga turnips may be sown from the middle of May to the middle of July. The strap-leaved sort can be sown from July first to the middle of September. Carrots may be grown with profit for farm stock, especially horses. The importance of the root crop is a system of rotation.

Buckwheat.—Rough places, old sod land, poor stubble, etc, may produce a fair crop of buckwheat with good effect on the soil. If ploughed under when nearly grown, it makes a good green manure that will fit the land for some more valuable crop.

Hay.—The best quality of hay is obtained by cutting the grass while in bloom. For this, mowing machines are indispensable. The scythe may do for the fence corners, but not for general use In choosing a mower, look to lightness of draft, strength, and construction. As between equally good machines, it is best to buy the one made nearest home, for convenience in making repairs. It is safer to have the cutting bar ahead, and to one side of the driver. The tedder is a valuable adjunct of the hay field, greatly facilitating the drying of the grass. The best hay is made by curing in the cock. Sweating improves the quality of hay, and prevents its heating in the mow. Cut grass that has had the sun for one day may be put up in large cocks, where it will keep well for a week if necessary, if protected from rain and dew by caps. These caps are easily made from common sheeting, and frequently pay for themselves the first season. The horse-fork is a great labor-saving implement, and should be more generally used. Haying is soon over, and everything should be employed that aids in the hurry of this work.

Fodder Crops.—Hungarian grass may follow the rye, and be off in time for fall seeding. A plot highly manured and sowed to corn will give in a few weeks a large supply of the green fodder for the milch cows. Any of this crop that is not needed for the piecing out for the pasture, makes good winter fodder when cut and cured.

Dress in a Hot Country.

It is, of course, superfluous to say that the better classes of Brazilians are always decently or even elegantly dressed from boyhood, yet the children of the most wealthy are sometimes introduced to visitors without any clothing but a string of beads around the neck, or a pair of elegant slippers on their tiny feet, while in the photograpic galleries one can find few pictures of any but nude children. Among the lower classes boys are frequently never dressed until they are 12 years old. Girls commonly wear clothes sooner, though the first few years of their lives pass with only a pair of ear-rings, which find their way into the ears of every female child before she is a year old. With servant women the costume consists of a long travelling skirt, whose waist is cut very low around the shoulders, from which it is constantly slipping. The short-sleeved waist is often the only under garment of white, but, as a rule, they are extremely fond of the gayest colors and delight to make their dresses from the kind of print designed to imitate patchwork. When their children are dressed at all they wear a single, long-sleeved loose garment, which covers the knee and which sometimes almost touches the ground. For these shapeless little dresses black is one of the favorite colors and the effect is the climax of singularity.—Para Correspondence.

A Dentist Tells a Queer Story.

"Why," said a prominent dentist to a Journal reporter, "a beautiful young lady came to me and insisted upon having her really fine teeth pulled out and false ones put in their place. I protested that it would be foolish, silly, senseless; but she said no, she would have them out, and if I would not do it some other dentist would. 'My teeth are not fashionable,' said she; "they are too long, and short little broad teeth like corn kernels are all the fashion now, and no one admires my mouth, and I will have them.' So I made her the teeth, they cost her just $300. She couldn't see anyone for two weeks after I pulled out her own. They were the upper ones only, and I made them up with gold plates for a handsome young fellow who had his own teeth knocked out in a base ball game. The worst of it is that he is in love with the very girl whose teeth he wears, and she knows they are hers. Just ponder on that." — New York Journal.

Intimate with the Moon.

They look through the telescope. The solid earth slips away from under their feet. They have left it behind them. They are 100 miles above the moon, sailing over its surface. The scenery below the party on which they fix their gaze is tumultously irregular, and yet bears throughout a general resemblance. Here is a specimen: A circular cavity, the exterior on one side and the interior on the other being brightly illuminated. They call it a cavity, but in the interior it seems level, except near the centre, from which there rises a cone or dome, bright on one side, on which the sun shines, and casting a shadow on the other along the foot of the inclosure. The central mound is higher than Mount Washington. The inclosing walls which fence it in are higher still, and the inclosure itself is more than fifty miles across. This is the type of a lunar crater on a grand scale. Others, however, are larger, their diameters being from two to three times that which we examine and covering a surface in some instances of nearly 20,000 square miles. From this they range down to insignificance. There are more than 50,000 craters on the moon, which indicate how prevalent volcanic action once was upon its surface. What a spectacle our satellite must have presented at the period of the greatest volcanic disturbance. Fifty thousand craters! many of them rivalling in height the loftier mountains of our own globe. Here they are mixed together in inextricable confusion.

LIFE IN THE MOON.

Now the observers are on the terminator, that line which separates the light and dark parts of the moon, and which seems so even to the naked eye, displaying now every conceivable irregularity. What is that glittering in the dark? Is it the reflection from some artificial work flashing the sun's rays back, telling a tale of habitation and industry? No; it is a mountain peak catching the solar beam, while the surrounding region is in darkness. On that peak the lunar day is dawning, the long day of 354½ hours. Could the party have time to watch it they would see the sunlight gradually steal along its rugged flanks, and slowly the whole landscape become illumined. But it would only reapeat in its general features that on which they had been gazing. As the sun gilds that mountain top, does any living being hail the beams that usher in the day? Now, if ever, is the time to ascertain if there is life in the moon. The observers are gazing through the greatest telescope in the world. They strain their eyes to see some sign, some token that the landscape they survey is not a desert. They are willing to be convinced where facts command conviction. It is grand, it is magnificent, but the magnificence of desolation. Where, then, are the cities, the fortifications, the cultivated fields, that charmed the eye and delighted the fancy of the older astronomers? Is it possible that these once existed and are now no more? Has a malevolent influence accompanied the growth of our instruments and dissipated them precisely in proportion to the improvement of our optical powers? Or must we believe that the older astronomers, viewing things dimly, and too eager to be convinced of that which they longed to believe, made up for the imperfections of their instruments by the brilliancy of their imaginations? But the party have no time for speculation.

FADED OUT OF SIGHT.

What is that now which attracts the observers' attention? It is a hollow groove in the surface of the moon. The party can trace its course, if they will, for a hundred miles. It is nearly half a mile in depth and several times as broad. To the older astronomers it would have been a military road, or to their clearer sighted successors a great canal. The observers see it as a fissure in the moon's surface. But it is not alone. There are many such. The surface of our satellite is cracked and rugged. Evidently at some period of its history it has had rough usage. But the party are nearing the end of their journey. For some time, by using all their strength, they have held the great tube to its work. But now the inexorable motion of the earth is carrying away from the observers the object of their contemplation. They are now on the last step of the ladder. They stand on tiptoe and clasp the great tube with both hands. They are clinging for dear life. It is gone! and the observer who has wandered so far is restored to Mother Earth.

The mighty wizard that transported us still points to those silent heavens whose mysteries he is destined to explore, but never again will he reveal the beauties of fair Cynthia's form to mortal eye upon the Western continent. It will be accompanied to Europe by Mr. C. E. R. Lundin soon, who will deliver it into the hands of Dr. Struve. This crowning effort of the optician may stand as the contribution which American art makes to Russian science.—Boston Correspondence New York Herald.

Suites and Flats.

When Bass moved into an apartment house, Fogg remarked to Mrs. B., "Quite appropriate, Mrs. Bass; sweet to the suites, you know." Fenderson, who was present, thought it was a pretty nice little compliment; so when he saw Bass next day he thought he would try it. "I hear you have moved into a family hotel," he began; "quite appropriate, flat to the flats, you know." And Fenderson still wonders why Bass should get mad over a remark that had made Mrs. B. smile so sweetly.

BRIGGS' GENUINE ELECTRIC OIL.

Electricity feeds the brain and muscles: in a word, it is Nature's food,

The Electric Oil possesses all the qualities that it is possible to combine in a medicine, thereby giving it a wide range of application as an internal remedy for man and beast. The happiest results follow its use and in Nervous Diseases, such as Rheumatism, Neuralgia and kindred diseases, it has no equal.

For Throat and Lung Diseases, Bowel Complaints, Etc.,

It is truly a marvel. The Oil, besides exciting appetite, promoting digestion and checking fermentation on the stomach, antidotes or counteracts the effect of uric acid, which produces rheumatism by destroying the oxolate and phosphate of lime in the bones, and the membranes inclosing the joints.

FOR THE
KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The "GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"
As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.
THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.
TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous
ALBERT LEA ROUTE.
A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

TO THE PUBLIC.

I feel a duty incumbent upon me to explain to my patrons why they did not receive their Fruit Trees this spring. On the evening before the day upon which I was going to the Nursery to fill the orders given me. I was treacherously and brutaly beaten and kicked in the Revere Hotel of Markdale, so much so that when I was in a position to proceed to business, the season had so far advanced that Fruit Trees could not be taken up. I trust this explanation will be sufficient to the public for the disappointment. My own pecuniary loss is considerable, but trust to be able this fall to make amends for the delay. S. L. M. Luke.

SWIFT OCEAN STEAMSHIPS.

From Twenty-five day Trips to Six-Day Trips.

Records of the Best Time Made on the Atlantic—Efforts to Still Further Increase the Speed of Steamers—New Vessels.

When the little steamship Savannah steered boldly out to the Atlantic in May, 1819, her speed was not so much thought of as the question whether she would ever get over at all. She made the passage from Savannah to Liverpool in twenty-two days, and returned in twenty-five days in November of the same year. This round voyage solved the experiment of steam ocean navigation, and from this time until to-day there have been regular cycles, or periods, in the increase of the speed of steamers, as well as in the particulars of size, comfort and luxury. It was not, however, until early in the fifties that particular attention was given to the increase of speed. Travellers who had been accustomed to the time of our fast American sailing packets viewed a fifteen to eighteen days trip by steamer as an excellent one. But this was changed when the hot rivalry between the Collins and Cunard steamship lines began, and the Collins line went to cutting down time at a rate which attracted world-wide attention. Thirteen and then twelve day passages began to be common. The American line put on the superb steamship Adriatic as the last of a fleet of flyers, and the Cunarders followed suit with the Persia and others, and between them the time was reduced to for regular passages. These were all side-wheeled steamers, and, burning an enormous amount of coal, were unable to carry much freight, so special attention was given to the care of cabin passengers, emigrants still sticking to the sailing vessels. The loss of the Arctic and Pacific, and other misfortunes, in a few years drove the popular Collins line out of existence, but not before the Adriatic had shaded a ten-day passage considerably. English steamships from that time out had all their own way until other nations began going to the Clyde to build ships with which to start lines of their own. By 1861 the old paddle-wheel steamers had generally given place to screw propellers, the fleet of which has since then gradually enlarged to its present proportions.

All this time English shipbuilders have not been idle, but very progressive and eager to seize on any improvement that would increase the speed of steamers. American inventors have not been idle either, and, in fact, the most important improvements and inventions in iron steamers have been made by Americans, though we have not an American-built steamer in the Atlantic trade. For many years ten days continued to be a good average fast passage, but new lines starting to compete in passenger and freight traffic began to rival and surpass the older lines by regularly cutting down the ten-day trips, until by 1875 eight-day trips began to be common. The White Star line was conspicuous for several years in this respect, though now, as a longer route is taken, the passages are not so quick. In 1876 the White Star steamer Britannic made six outward trips, averaging 7 days 18 hours 26 minutes, the homeward passages averaging 7 days, 20 hours 56 minutes. The fastest trips of the vessels of this line are as follows: Germanic, 7:11:37; Britannic, 7:10:53; both made outward in 1877. In 1879 the Celtic made an outward passage in 8:4:25, and the Baltic in 8:0.6. The Republic made an outward passage in 1881 in 8:1:20. The fastest average of fifty-four outward voyages made by the Britannic since 1876 is 8:7:17, the average homeward time being 8:3:22.

About the same time the Inman line steamers were making some quick trips. The City of Richmond made an outward trip in 1875 in 8:0:12; the Berlin in 1877 in 7:14:12; the Chester in 1878 in 8:3:40; and the Brussels in the same year in 8:1:39. The Berlin made seven passages outward in 1875 averaging 8:10:56. The averages of the Richmond for several years were also under nine days.

The fastest passage ever made by any steamer of the National line was made outward by the Spain in 1872 in EIGHT DAYS AND THIRTEEN HOURS.

The Egypt has has also made several trips under nine days. The line does not claim, however, to make any better than regular steady nine-day trips to Liverpool at present.

The Cunard line, French line, North German Lloyds line, and others also had vessels which made some exceptionally quick trips between 1875 and 1880, but this period may be set down as the nine-day period, though, as shown above, the averages of the voyages of several crack ships during that time was considerably under nine days.

The Arizona of the Williams & Guion line astonished everybody by cutting under the fastest time on record in September, 1881, when she made the voyage this way in 7 days 8 hours 32 minutes. The next month she eclipsed this performance, making the run homeward in 7 days 7 hours 48 minutes, the fastest trip she has yet succeeded in making. A year later, however, the Alaska of the same line surpassed even this remarkable feat, making the homeward voyage in 6 days 18 hours 37 minutes, and this stands to-day as the fastest on record. A recent trip was almost as quick. She sailed April 28, and arrived here in May 6, making the voyage in 8 days 23 hours and 46 minutes. The best daily run of the Alaska was 447 knots, made in November, 1882.

But the steamer Oregon of the same line, which will be here in August, is expected to outstrip in speed even the Greyhound of the Atlantic, as the Alaska is called. She is being built on the Clyde, by John Elder & Son, who also built the Arizona and the Alaska. The Oregon will be 520 feet long, 54 feet beam, and have engines from 13,000 indicated horse-power, 2,000 more than the Alaska, She will have 72 furnaces and 9 boilers, engines of the usual type, three inverted cylioders, one high-pressure 70 inches and two low pressure 104 inches diameter, and will be of about 9,000 tons gross tonage.

Of course other lines have had to follow suit in the direction of speed, and several are

STRIVING AFTER SIX DAY BOATS.

The new steamer Normandie of the French line arrived here May 13, on her first trip, having made the run from Havre, 3,200 miles in 8 days, 16 hours. The Alaska led her by about a mile and a quarter, an hour in average speed, but the Normandie is expected to do much better when the newness is worn off the machinery. It must be remembered, in making comparisons, that the French steamers have a course about 360 miles longer than the Liverpool steamers. The Elbe of the Bremen line made the trip 3,473 miles from the Needles recently in 8 days 7 hours 45 minutes. The City of Rome of the Anchor line has received additional boilers and more powerful engines, and on her recent speed trials is reported to have made 63 revolutions and attained a speed of 18½ knots. If so she can beat the Alaska, but the speed trials were probably made in smooth water.

Thomson & Co., of Glasgow, are building a new 6,500-ton steamer for the National line. She is to be 430 feet long, 51 feet beam, and built entirely of steel. She will be named the America, and it is predicted she will turn out a six-day boat. The Egypt, Spain and Italy of this line have all good models, but their engines are not powerful enough. It is contemplated to take them out one at a time and put in additional boilers and more powerful engines to increase their speed.

The Cunard line has at present a flyer in the Servia, built of steel at Glasgow in 1881. She beat the Arizona's time not long ago on the eastward trip, making it in 7 days 5 hours, but has never beaten the Arizona going westward. The Inman line has a 6,000-ton ship, called the City of Chicago, nearly completed which will be here about the middle of the summer. It is thought that before another year passes one or more of these new crack ships will inaugurate the six-day period.

The five-day epoch is regarded as being yet rather remote, but steamship men consider it by no means improbable that, with the continual improvement in the mechanical science will be made ere many years. Of course, increase of speed means increase in size, in consumption of coal, and consequent increase of expense. The Oregon will burn nearly 300 tons of coal a day. The old iron steamer of 2,500 to 3,000 tons is changed to a steel one of 6,000 to 9,000 tons. The coast-wise steamers we now have are larger than the old trans-Atlantic side-wheelers. Very fast American built steamers, mostly iron, are now engaged in trade between Northern ports, and the improvements in them are equal to those in the steamships engaged in the foreign trade. On both sides of the Atlantic busy brains are at work constantly devising new inventions and appliances to increase speed as well as safety, comfort and luxury, and any improvement soon becomes general under the pressure of the great rivalry in ocean passenger and freight traffic. For this reason, there is little radical difference to be seen among the first-class ocean steamships of the present day.

The Lambeth Dole.

At this gate (Morton's Gateway), was distributed the "immortal dole." The meaning of the word "dole"—"share" or "portion"—was very literally observed in those days, the archbishops making up munificent "alms dishes" from their own tables, adding also sums of money. This charity sometimes reached a very grand scale, Archbishop Winchelsey being specially mentioned by Godwin as having "therein excelled all before or after him."

"He maintained," says Godwin, "many poor scholars at the universities, and was exceedingly bountiful to other persons in distress. . . . Besides the daily fragments of his house, he gave every Friday and Sunday unto every beggar that came to his door a loaf of bread of a farthing price, sufficient for one person one day. . . . And there were usually on such alms days in time of dearth to the number of 5,000, but in a plentiful time 4,000, and seldom or never under, which alone summed up £500 per annum. . . . Over and above this he used to give, every great festival day, 150 pence to as many poore people; to send daily meate, drink and bread unto such as by reason of age and sickness were not able to fetch alms at his gate; and to send money, meate, and apparrel to such as he thought wanted the same and were ashamed to beg."

The dole at Lambeth in 1806 consisted of fifteen quartern loaves, nine stone of beef, and five shillings in halfpence. The beef was made into broth with oatmeal, and the whole dole, divided in three equal portions, was distributed among thirty poor persons, who came to receive it in installments of ten persons every Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday in rotation. This "dole" continues to be distributed.—MRS. Z. B. GUSTAFSON, in Harper's Magazine for June.

What He Really Was Afraid of.

It is said of a rich Philadelphian who has had some experience with silver stock that while on his way to New York recently he sat in the same seat with a well-known burglar for over an hour, and seemed to enjoy his society. When the burglar left the seat along came a well-dressed stranger and dropped into the seat with the remark:

"I believe you are Mr. Short of Philadelphia?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, Mr. Short, I have been sent East by the stock-holders of the Great Inducement Silver Mine to——"

"Excuse me, sir—good morning, sir!" interrupted Mr. Short, as he seized his grip and moved up eight seats ahead.—American Mining Journal.

The Sea Serpent's Rival.

The big fish of Lake Tahoe again made his appearance day before yesterday. He suddenly rose in front of the steamer Governor Stanford and disputed her passage. There was quite a rough tussel for about ten minutes, when the fish leaped upward and snapping off the bowsprit, went away with it in its mouth. As the fish is making so much trouble the owners of the steamers will send below for a harpoon to be fired from a cannon, and will try to kill it. Heretofore this fish had only be seen two or three times in the past twenty-five years. In 1868 he attacked a large boat and drowned four Canadians, since which time he has not been seen till this year.—Virginia City Enterprise.

Midnight in a Menagerie.

"Don't talk so loud," said the wa chman; "you'll wake the oudad."

"The what?" said the reporter.

"The oudad," replied the watchman; "that's what they call it; he's a lovely bird and has a voice like a buzz saw. And when he buzzes, gosh! So let him sleep," and the watchman silently led the way past the oudad.

"Cheese it," broke out the watchman again. "Do you hear that?" An elephant had evidently kicked his companion.

"Are the elephants apt to be very restless at night?"

"Oh, very. And when an elephant is restless, there's a good deal that's restless. They sleep on one side till that's tired and then they flop over on the other. That was a flop over we just heard."

"What's this?" asked the reporter, pointing to something in the path.

"That," replied the watchman, following up the obstacle with his lantern, "seems to be part of a camel. But where's the rest of him? Oh, here it is. They stretch out well, don't they? These are magnificent humps—made expressly for this circus, too. They are harmless."

"What, the humps?"

"No, the camels. And they make no noise at night unless they find shingle nails in their food. Then they complain."

"Don't get too near the business end of that thing," said the watchman, lifting up his lantern so that it was even darker than before. "That is a mule. Never interfere with a mule's plans, and in approaching him always allow for a contraction and a subsequent expansion of the muscles. Next to the mule are the zebra-striped ponies. We never venture to use soap on those stripes. Here are some very rare things, and they are as queer as they are rare. They are the giraffes. No one ever heard a giraffe murmur. Observe the length of their neck. What a winter resort for diphtheria! You can get something of an idea of their length of neck by picturing in your mind's eye four yards of sore throat and the amount of vinegar and salt required for one gargle. The giraffe is indeed a difficult thing to keep; he dies so easily and almost without provocation."

"This animal here," continued the watchman, still walking by the caged animals, "is not, as you might have supposed, a Harlem goat. No; this is the sacred bull. It is said he was taken from the Pope."

"Is he very sacred?" asked the incredulous reporter.

"Yes; he's extremely sacred. He gets more sacred every day. The amount of reverence he inspires in his keepers is only equaled by that of the mule."

Having reached the end of the stalled animals the watchman announced, by a twist of his lantern, that he was about to come upon the ferocious wild beast in cages. He then put out the lantern, and he and the reporter sat down on the railing that protects the caged animals from the spectators. It was a little early for the usual midnight roar of the animals, but not half so early as the visitors had thought. For soon there came from the cage back of them a noise that startled both of them out of a week's growth. It was the greeting of an African lion.

It only required the roar of one lion with good lungs to start the whole menagerie. That beautiful bird called the emu was the first to reply to the lion's call. The reply was nothing more than a mild form of sneeze but it went a great way. And in less time than it takes to record it the congregation of animals that were endowed with any sort of an apparatus for making a racket had turned their pipes and were blowing and bellowing to see which could make the most noise. It was a lively place to be in without any light. But that did not seem to make any difference to the animals. The baboon barked and the rhinoceros grunted. And the louder they barked and grunted the louder the lions and tigers grunted. Then the elephants joined in the general disorder, there was no peace for the wicked. One elephant is usually considered sufficient to supply one family with all the noise it wants; but when twenty elephants lift up their voices in one sympathetic lamentation, nothing but the deepest coal mine could ever furnish a safe harbor or a sure retreat. Add to this the hair-splitting noises of the cockatoos and the macaws, the mournful lowing of the Nubian rhinoceros and the unparalleled snore of the hippopotamus, and the effect is appalling. The watchman looked at the reporter and the reporter eyed the watchman. Neither could speak. And it would not have made any difference if they had spoken. They might have roared until they were black in the face and still not have made themselves heard. Each grasped the other's hand and bolted for the entrance with as much haste as though pursued by the whole menagerie.—New York Tribune.

THE ALGOMA ELECTION.—This election is now on the tapis. It may perhaps be a useful hint to intimate that an absolute lead at the polls may be obtained by the judicious distribution to the electors of PUTNAM'S CORN EXTRACTOR, the great remedy for corns. Every sufferer would be made happy, and would certainly vote for the person affording him relief. Beware of dangerous substitutes. They are now being offered as "just as good." Use only Putnam's.

To have respect for ourselves guides our morals, and to have a deference for others governs our manners.

A Minister's Evidence.

The all prevalent malady of civilized life is Dyspepsia. Rev. W. E. Gifford, of Bothwell, was cured of dyspepsia and liver complaint that rendered his life almost a burden. The cure was completed by three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters (36)

A Remarkable Fact.

It is a remarkable fact that W. A. Elgers, of Frankville, who was so far gone with liver and kidney complaint that his life was despaired of, was cured with four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters. At one time he lay a fortnight without an operation of the bowels. (35)

FOR THE
KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER
There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The most eminent medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these to health is the only way by which health can be regained. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary Troubles, for the distressing disorders of women, Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and counterfeits. Said to be just as good.

Character in Smoking.

It's twenty years, said a cigar dealer, now, since I began to sell tobacco, and in that time I have closely studied the characters of my patrons, forming my conclusions from the kind of company they keep. I mean by the kind of cigars they smoke. I can always tell. An even-tempered, quiet fellow never goes to an extreme in choosing a tobacco; a nervous man wants something strong and furious; a mild man something that smokes and nothing more. The same conditions run through chewing tobacco. Then there is a great deal in the way men handle their cigars. Very few can smoke on one side as well as on the other. Men come in here every day who have been smoking for thirty years, and if they were to place a cigar on the wrong side of the mouth they would appear as clumsy and green as a boy who was trying his first weed. The muscles of the face become set to one position. Any change requires a reorganization of the face. So it ain't by the way the cigar is embraced in the mouth that you can estimate a man.

If a man smokes his cigar only enough to keep it lighted, and relishes taking it from between his lips to cast a whirling curl of blue smoke into the air, set him down as an easy-going fellow, who cares little for how the world goes and no more for himself. He has keen perceptions and delicate sensibilities. He will not create trouble, but is apt to see it out when it is once begun.

Beware of the man who never releases the cigar from the grip of his teeth, and is indifferent of whether it burns or dies. He is cool, calculating, and exacting. He is seldom energetic physically, but lives easily off of those who perform the labor.

A man who smokes a bit, rests a bit, and fumbles the cigar more or less, is apt to be easily affected by circumstances. He may be energetic, careful, generous, and courageous, but he is vacillating and liable to change on a moment's notice.

If the cigar goes our frequently the man has a whole-soul disposition, is a devil-may-care sort of fellow, with a lively brain, a glib tongue, and generally a fine fund of anecdotes and yarns.

To hold half the cigar in the mouth and smoke indifferently is a lazy man's habit. They are generally of little force and their characters are not of the higher strata.

A nervous man, or one under exciting influences, fumbles his cigar a great deal. He is a kind of popinjay among men.

Holding the cigar constantly between the teeth, chewing it occasionally, and not caring whether or not it has been lighted at all, are characteristics of men with the tenacity of bull-dogs. They never forget anything and never release a hold.

A fop stands his cigar on end, and an inexperienced smoker either points it straight ahead or almost at right-angles with his course.—Chicago News.

Little Points about a Very Big Bridge.

The New York-Brooklyn Bridge was projected years ago. It is true the project differed somewhat in detail from the magnificent work which is at once the wonder and the pride of our people to-day, but it is equally true that the bridge of to-day has cost a trifle (?) more than the estimated expense of the scheme of long ago, which was modestly placed at about $600,000. The following article on the subject is taken from the Lowell (Mass.) Mercury, November 14, 1829, and is reproduced verbatim et literatum: "A project has been set on foot in New York to unite that city with Long Island, by the erection of a bridge across the East River to Brooklyn. The New York Gazette on Friday furnishes the outlines of the proposed plan, which we have copied below.—Boston Bulletin.

The most notable accident which marked the progress of the work was that of the 19th of June, 1878, when one of the great strands of the cable broke loose from the New York anchorage, carrying with it the huge iron "shoe" to which it was fastened, as a child's ball is jerked back to the hand by its India rubber string. It was noonday and the streets were crowded, when there was heard a thunderous twang and buzz, and dashing the men upon the anchorage far down into the street, the singing steel sprang at one bound to the tower, and dashing the shoe behind it, ran down the riverside face of the great pile, a cascade of tiny sparks at the summit, and in the wave beneath a rapid of raging foam.

While the bridge was building, people seemed to be crazy to prostrate themselves on top of the towers. One man started on the journey, got out a few hundred feet, and calmly lying down, declined to budge an inch in either direction. Mortal terror had seized his soul and he clung like grim death to the wooden slats. Workmen were compelled to go out and get him. Another ambitious gentleman fell down in an epileptic fit half-way between the anchorage and tower, and his legs and arms flew wildly about as he lay on the narrow path—about three feet in width—and sympathetic undertakers, who had shops in the vicinity, gathered in the expectation of doing all the justice possible to a body that was about to fall 140 feet. Again the bridge workmen intervened and the frothing unfortunate was taken to the ground.

Pertified remains of a forest have been discovered near the railway crossing of the Saskatchewan.

NORTH-WEST NOTES.

Carefully Collated for our Readers.

Gladstone hotels and boarding-houses are crowded.

Winnipeg police authorities have established a rogues gallery.

Farm land in the vicinity of Regina has sold at $5.50 per acre.

Emerson's municipal by-law for $25,000, was carried by a majority of four votes.

The London money market quotes Winnipeg bonds:—Issue of 1875, 208; 1883, 2 prem.

Winnipeg's open Board of Trade and Stock Exchange has been opened.

A postoffice is to be established at once at Moose Jaw, with John R. Whitman as postmaster.

Immigrants continue to arrive at Winnipeg in large numbers. Most of them make their way to the farming lands in the west.

L. B. Archibald has been appointed superintendent of the line of road from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, with headquarters at Port Arthur.

Manitoba's aggregate lumber cut last winter was 78,500,000 feet. It now sells for $25 per thousand feet, the same quality having sold last year for $32 per thousand.

A new Episcopal church was consecrated on Queen's Birthday at Sunnyside, on a hill known as Moose Nose, fourteen miles from Winnipeg. The building cost $1,200, and seats 100 people.

Extra provision has been made by the Department of the Interior for completing a much larger survey of lands in the Northwest this season than any previous year. The staff and facilities for executing the work have been almost doubled.

The first boat of the season arrived at Westbourne from the Narrows. They made the run in twelve hours. Lake Manitoba is now thoroughly open for navigation. The overflow this year caused a good deal of loss, but the water has how almost entirely receded.

The North Dufferin Agricultural Society offer a first prize of $25, and a second prize of $15 for the best essays on the capabilities, physical characteristics, etc., of the North Dufferin electoral division. The society's show will take place in Nelson on the 26th and 27th September.

The steamer Northwest, in charge of Capt. Sheets, arrived at Prince Albert from Cumberland, on May 12, and started on the following day for Edmonton. Navigation between these points is now regularly opened, and several boats are entered on their regular trips from Selkirk westward.

Recently there were 2,500 acres of land entered for homestead and pre-emption at the land office, Brandon. Nearly all the land taken up by these entries is in the Pipestone country, and the settlers are chiefly Englishmen lately arrived. A party of Irish immigrants went in there last week.

Trouble has arisen between the railway company and the county of Minnedosa. The company has resolved not to accept the bonus of $100,000 from the municipality on the terms proposed by the municipality, and it is more than probable that Minnedosa will get the go by, and that another town will be established by the railway company six miles farther on.

A weekly mail service is to be established at once between Troy, N.W.T., and Prince Albert. West of Prince Albert the mail service will probably continue as it is till the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed to Calgary, when mails will be dispatched from that point. A weekly passenger stage will be run in connection with the mail from Troy.

Langdon, Sheppard & Co., the well-known railway contractors, last year consumed 450,000 bushels of oats, nearly all of which was imported from the United States and the eastern provinces. This year they will consume the same quantity, but instead of importing, they have purchased the oats in this country, and 325,000 bushels were stored at Moose Jaw six weeks ago.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

Europe is beginning to recognize the excellent quality of Indian wheat. In 1881-82 the Punjaub sent to France six million cwts, and to Antwerp about two thirds of that quantity.

The amount of paid notes of the Bank of England reaches the enormous sum of £94,000,000, or $470,000,000. If placed in a pile it would be eight miles high.

Rapid as has been the increase of the population of the United States, the increase of the deaf, dumb, blind, and insane has been more rapid still. The number of all those thus afflicted is said to have risen from 68,151 in 1760 to 98,484 in 1870, and from that at a bound to 251,690 in 1880.

The population of Mexico at the present time is said to be 12,000,000, as compared with 7,829,000 in 1859 and 6,000,000 in 1808. The largest portion of the inhabitants are of the native race, Mexican Indians. Although the national language is Castilian, the natives still speak the languages or dialects of their ancestors.

The United States possesses in round numbers 38,000,000 cattle; India possesses 30,000,000, and Russia 29,000,000. Russia has 20,000,000 horses, the United States 10,500,000, and Austria 3,500,000. Australia possesses 80,000,000 sheep, the Argentine Republic 68,000,000, and Russia 63,000,000. The United States come fourth in this list, with 36,000,000; but in the matter of swine they head the world, having 48,000,000. The goat is an important animal in many countries; India has no fewer than 29,000,000, Africa 15,000,000, and Mexico 6,000,000.

Although New York is the most populous state of the American Union, containing about one-tenth of the entire population of the Republic, it has not the densest population. The number of square miles in the whole Republic, not including the Indian territory and of some unorganized tract, is 2,900,170. The population in 1880 was 50,155,785, or 17.29 per square mile. But in Rhode Island the population reaches the enormous figure of 254,87 per square mile; in Massachusetts it is 221.78, in New Jersey 171,73, in Connecticut 128.52, and in New York 106.74.

ZULULAND'S WHITE CHIEF.

John Dunn's Wild Home in Zululand.

From the top of the first ridges that we cross we can see in the distance a huge shapeless smear of black upon the green uplands, like a spot of ink on a billiard table. As we approach the plot gradually develops itself into a stockade inclosure, containing a number of little dumpling-shaped hovels and one larger building roofed with corrugated iron. To our left, half way up the slope, facing that upon which the kraal stands, are grouped together two or three small houses built in colonial fashion, toward which we turn our horses' heads at a sign from the Zulu. As we come up to the nearest house three female figures issue from it, the foremost of which—a tall portly mulatto-faced woman, in a broad-brimmed hat and light print dress—is too familiar to me from description, not to be recognized at once. It is no other than Mrs. John Dunn No. 1, the most distinguished among the countless Queens of the White Chief of Zululand, inasmuch as she has at least some admixture of white blood in her veins, while the rest are pure Zulus. Behind her stand two of her daughters, who have found husbands among the English colonists of the district, and two or three Kaffir servants in the background complete the picture. We are invited to visit the kraal. Away we go accordingly, down the hillside, across the almost dry water-course at its foot, and up the opposite slope to the narrow entrance of the stockade that surrounds the kraal. The wide circular space in the centre of the enclosure is literally crammed with black, long horned, wild-looking eattle, while around the corral, between the inner and outer palisades, stand a number of these little beehives of baked clay, thatched with dry grass, and with a simple opening in the side to serve as a door, window and chimney, which I have described in a former letter when dealing with the Kaffirs of Cape Colony. "I suppose they make them stronger than this in time of war?" suggest I to Mr. Coates, the stockade being merely a fence of of intertwisted saplings, little higher than a well-grown man. "No," he answers, "the Zulus hve no skill in fortification; they

ALWAYS FIGHT OUT IN THE OPEN.

They have a saying that a "Zulu's time for attack is just when the horns of the cattle begin to be seen through the morning mist." The grim picturesqueness of the phrase, illustrated as it has lately been by so many unexpected onslaughts, has a haunting power of its own which no words can convey. But at this point our talk is suddenly interrupted. Just as we are in the very centre of the sea of horns and hoofs that fill the corral, the crowd of cattle is suddenly reinforced by a crowd of Zulus, to whom the arrival of strangers, and one of them a lady, is not an every-day event in this lonely place. They swarm around us with free-spoken criticisms and lusty shouts of laughter, till the whole space is one welter of nude black figures and woolly heads, rolling eyes, grinning teeth, and rough native "chaff," bandied unsparingly, the genuine Zulu loving a joke almost as well as a pinch of snuff.

Some milk, fresh from the cow, is now brought forward in a vessel made simply of dried grass, but so skilfuly woven that not a drop oozes out. When we drain it twice in succession the public amusement rises to its height. "See how thirsty they are!" "What a lot they can drink!" And the good-natured savages crowd up to us to display their egg-shaped snuff-boxes and bone ornaments, mostly carved with spear-point. The majority, though fine men, fall short of the stature of those northern giants who fought Gingihlova and Ulunda, but Mr. Coates points out to me more than one man who distinguished himself among "John Dunn's scouts" during the war of 1879.

The great sight of all, however, is still to come. Our good host leads the way to the which struck us on first approaching the kraal, and which now proves to be the residence of some of John Dunn's Zulu queens. It is reached by a zigzag entrance, so arranged as completely to prevent any outsider from peeping in, like that which I saw at the house of the Afghan Ameer's father-in-law, Sirdar Yahia Khan. The secretary signs to Mrs. Ker to enter, but checks me as I attempt to follow: "They won't mind your wife going in, but they are always shy of strange men." Within lies a small courtyard containing two or three tiny huts, and beyond it stands the main building, which seems to consist entirely of one room, without furniture of any kind. In the veranda a young native woman is nursing an infant, whose almost white skin contrasts very markedly with her own, while a boy of 3 or 4 years, equally fair, stands beside her. Three or four other girls, all very young, but large and fat, as African beauties always are, are talking and giggling among themselves in the background. All are profusely ornamented with broad bands of white, blue and red beads—which are the court diamonds of a Zulu—around the neck and waist, but their sole clothing is a very diminutive kind of apron.

The Black Cap.

Why do judges put on a black cap before pronouncing a death sentence? One explanation is that in early times the judges were for the most part ecclesiastics, and, in spite of the Church's prohibition that no one in holy orders should pronounce the sentence of death, they were, by virtue of their judicial office, often called upon to do so. Hence the judge, when the sentence of death had to be passed, laid aside his clerical character, and putting on this cap to cover the clerical tonsure, thus showed that he acted now in civil capacity alone. The great number of clerical judges made the custom most universal, and we do not hesitate to accept this as the reason why the act is observed to this day.

This touching little incident is from the Rochester Post. One rises from its perusal with mixed feelings: "A beautiful young girl was about to be married to a bachelor seventy years of age, but very rich. On the eve of her marriage she learned that his wealth had been suddenly swept away, leaving him a penniless old man. Did the noble girl desert him in this, his hour of trouble? She did, indeed, and her parents helped her, too."—Ex.

Pulpit Humors.

The Drawer has never had so good a metaphor, complete in all its parts, as the following, which is out from a recent article in a prominent religious newspaper. We feel sure that the metaphor is all right, because the author of it is a doctor of Divinity:—"These seeds of pride are bursting with flame which might lay the foundations of a deluge that would with its fangs envenom my soul."

It was a much less highly cultivated minister who recently made this contribution to etymology in a sermon on the "Beatitudes." "My friends," said the preacher, "before proceeding to unfold our subject it is necessary to give a definition of the word I have just used. Beatitude is composed of two words, 'be' and 'attitude.' Be means to live, to exist; and when a man lives, when he really lives, he always strikes an attitude. Hence we view," etc.

This is hardly a fair illustration of the value of preaching. A much better one comes from one of the pleasantest cities in Connecticut. A distinguished clergyman in the leading church had one morning finished his sermon, when one of his much-impressed hearers came forward to thank him for it, and this dialogue followed:

"It is fifteen years since I heard you last. In this very place, fifteen years ago, I heard you preach a sermon that I have never forgotten. It did me more good than any sermon I ever heard. It stuck by me, and I have always wanted to thank you for it."

"Ah, indeed!" replied the pleased preacher. "Such evidence of my poor labor is very grateful. I should like to know what sermon it was. Do you remember the text?"

"Well, no, I can't tell what the text was, now, but it was the greatest sermon I ever heard. It just lifted me. I never forgot that sermon."

"I should really like to know what sermon it was," replied the clergyman, much interested in so decided a case of the power of the pulpit.. "If you cannot recall the text, what was the subject of the sermon?"

"Well, now, doctor, it's gone from me; I forget what the text was, and I can't rake up the subject now, but I tell you it was a great sermon. It did me more good—it was the most powerful discourse I ever heard. I shan't forget it if I live to be eighty."

"But can't you recall anything in it? You excite my curiosity. Can't you give me a clew that will identify it?"

"No, I can't tell what was in it exactly; the subject has slipped out of my mind. I don't know exactly what you said, but it was a magnificent sermon. It did me more good than all the preaching I ever heard. It has just staid by me for fifteen years."

"And you can not recall a word that will help me to identify it?"

"Well, I can't now bring up what it was about, but I remember how it wound up. You said, 'Theology ain't religion—not by a ——sight!'"—EDITOR'S DRAWER, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Padlocks are said to have been invented by Beecher, of Nuremburg, in 1540.

The first obelisk mentioned in history that of Rameses, which was erected about 1485 B. C.

Fitz-Stephen, a chronicler of the time of Henry II., mentions the delight which the English took in horse races.

The first work favoring the use of Saturday as the Christian Sabbath was published in 1628 by Theophilus Brabourne, clergyman.

The tabernacle was constructed 1491 B.C. That set up at Shiloh by Joshua, 1444 B.C., was replaced by Solomon's Temple 1004 B.C.

The power of the town of Halifax to put to death all criminals who stole anything worth more than thirteen pence halfpenny, was used as late as 1650.

The battle of Naseby was fought June 14, 1645. King Charles, who commanded the reserve, fled at the close of the fight, losing his cannon, baggage and nearly 5000 prisoners.

Stone mortars, throwing a missile weighing twelve pounds, are mentioned as being employed in 757 A. D., and in 1232 A. D., it is incontestable that the Chinese besieged in Caifongfu used cannon against their Mongol enemies.

Ancient law was very severe on vagrants. In 1530 they were whipped and compelled to swear to return to their birthplace or to the place in which they had dwelt for three years. In 1535, vagrants committed a second time, lost part of one ear, and if committed a third time, were put to death. Milder laws came in under the second Hanoverian sovereigns.

That indefatigable English antiquarian, Professor Grant Allen, has recently had another learned article in Knowledge, on "Our Ancestors," most of whom, according to historic fact, inductive reasoning and living physical proof, he finds are not Saxon, nor even Kelt, but older still, Euskarian Keltic. Even Professor Freeman, he asserts, and his followers, when compelled to come down from a priori reasoning and pinned to proven fact, can only allot the eastern and southeastern portion of England proper to his great Teutonic nation, leaving all the other large divisions of England, half the Lowlands of Scotland, together with the Highlands, Wales, and the greater part of Ireland, dominated by the older races. The great Teutonic race he finds an ingenious myth.

ANOTHER TWIST.

The proprietor of the Advance has a wonderful weakness for endeavoring to make white appear black and vice versa. Last week he charged us with statements which we did not make, but simply stated that we were informed so and so, and then he denies the truthfullness of them. If we believe him, we must admit he has not learned the printing business. Then he states as much as, that we were obliged to sell the farm and go into the printing business, while he knows we did not sell the farm until nearly two years after we had launched our bark in the newspaper enterprise. We have no sympathy with those who are so anxious as the Advance has shown itself misrepresenting facts and trying to mislead the public. We have as yet been unable to discover the name of the proprietor of the Advance on the voter's list as a ratepayer, tenant, householder or anything else, but it is often the case that such are the readiest to make a noise about "themselves."

THE EXCURSION.

A heavy rain fell during the night previous, and the morning looked threatening consequently a large number from a distance failed to put in an appearance, however a goodly number boarded the train at Berkeley, Markdale and Flesherton, filling seven coaches comfortably. A very pleasant time was spent on the trip having good coaches and not being crowded, those on board enjoyed themselves immensely. The train made good time, which is very desirable and not often experienced on such occasions. About eight o'clock the clouds broke up and a beautiful morning followed. The train arrived in Toronto at eleven o'clock, being 15 minutes behind time, when the party scattered in all directions. At 4:30 however, the majority of them were on hand, and the days recreation concluded by arriving home nearly on time.

BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

The Brooklyn Bridge, the great architectural wonder of the age, spanning the East River between the cities of New York and Brooklyn was opened for public traffic on Thursday last, May the 24th. The bridge has a history which takes up columns of space in the daily papers, but our readers can form some idea of the extent of this structure from the fact that thirteen years have been occupied in building it and the total cost amounts to over fifteen million dollars! Other figures which serve to give an idea of the structure, are as follows: Entire length, 5,989 feet; between the towers, or the length of the suspended portion, 1,575½ feet; height of roadway in the centre, 135 feet; at the towers, 118 feet. A terrible disaster has already occurred on this new bridge. On Wednesday, the 30th of May, a woman stumbled and fell, and as the crowd pressed upon her she shrieked, the crowd from both sides crushed together to discover the cause, and a panic ensued. Many women and children were trodden under foot. Twelve persons are reported killed, and a great number wounded.

The Nottawasaga Grangers are making preparations for holding a pic-nic on a gigantic scale, on the 7th of June. The gathering will take place at Casey's Grove, between Creemore and Avening. Among others, Messrs Chas Drury, M. P. P., and O. J. Phelps, M. P. P., are expected to be present. A big time is expected.

FIRE.—Mr. Wm. Cameron, lot 35, con. 8, Artemesia, had his barn burned one day last week, together with a wagon, hay, harness, a quantity of grain and other articles, there was no insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Stinson & sharp have opened in Guy's wagon shop, and are preparing to erect a brick store in place of the one burned recently.

Quite a number are going on the excursion to Toronto, Wednesday.

Seeding is through and a rapid growth has set in, may it continue.

GLENELG COUNCIL.

Council met at the Town Hall on 28th May, pursuant to notice and organized as a Court of Revision.

All members present. The Deputy Reeve in the chair. Appeals were heard and assessment roll amended as follows:—

James Quillman entered on the roll instead of Edward Quillman.

The personal property of Donald Leitch, D. O'Hanly and Jno. Sweney struck off.

Lot 5, con. 15, and North part of lot 5, con. 14, assessed to D. Quirk, instead of John Coffey.

Lots 6 and 7, con. 2 N.D.R. taken from C. Firth's assessment and placed on the non-resident roll.

Thos. McNea, reduced $500 on real property.

The roll was then finally passed and certified by the clerk and the Court of Revision closed.

At the close of the Court of Revision the Council resumed and took up general business and passed the following accounts;—

John S. Black, assessing $85; for services required by the department of Agriculture $15: distributing notices, $5: Duncan Campbell repairing Rocky Saugeen Bridge $15.

Council adjourned.

PRESBYTERY OF OWEN SOUND.—Presbytery met in Division St. Church, Owen Sound, on the 22nd ult. Mr. Currie reported that he had moderated in a call to a minister in Kilsyth congregation, that it came out in favour of Mr. E. Mullen, that the salary promised was $600 and a manse. Mr. Curries conduct was approved, and the call sustained. At a subsequent stage, in reply to a telegram from the clerk of Presbytery, Mr. Mullen accepted the call and the induction was fixed for the 6th of June at 2 o'clock p. m., in Kilsyth Church. Mr. Currie was appointed to preside, Mr. McLaren to preach, Mr. Scott to address the minister, and Mr. A. McLenan the people. Mr. Colter declined a call to Nelson congregation. Manitoba. Mr. D. D. McLennan was appointed to dispense ordinances in the middle field of peninsula. Mr. Currie gave notice that at next ordinary meeting he would move that notice of parties under discipline by any session be sent to all Ministers within the bounds of Presbytery, and also the clerks of neighboring presbyteries. Presbytery adjourned to meet at Kilsyth Church, on the 6th of June, at 2 p. m., and was closed with the benediction.—O. S. Times.

JOHN SOMERVILLE, M. A. Clerk.

ROBBERY.—Two set of whiffletrees and doubletrees, 7 plough chains, 3 clevises and rings were stolen from the premises of Mr. Jonathan Robinson 15th con., Normanby, a while since. Constable Carson and Small tracked two men across lots 18 and 19 to the 20th side road, where trace of them was lost on the grass. It has been suggested that mischief was the cause but such jokes might prove serious to those prepetrating them — Durham Chronicle.

BURGLARY.—A burglary was committed at John Vicker's store on the Durham Road. The modus operandi was rather peculiar; the windowpane was covered with tar and a bag applied, the pieces of glass sticking to the bag. A cash box containing $25 was abstracted but the thief was suspected and the suspicion proving well founded he disgorged and Mr. Vickers consented not to prosecute. The culprit is a mere youth and this may teach him that honesty is the best policy.—Durham Chronicle.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

Notice.—To whom it may concern. Notice is hereby given that the streets of Markdale must be cleared off the full width of the road allowance, from obstructions of any kind on or before the 11th inst. By order of Police Trustees.

We omitted to mention among the prizes taken in Markdale on the 24th May, that Robt. Sproule took first for step dancing. Some people on the ground complained of unfairness so the dancing was preformed over again before three judges from a distance, and again decided in favor of Robert.

The annual pic-nic at the Irish Lake, will take place on Thursday the 21st of June, great preparations are being made by the committee of management for a good day's sport, and if the weather is favorable, there will no doubt be, as usual, an immense gathering.

On Monday evening last while Mr. Thos. Butler and wife and John Hogan, Artemesia, were going home they found on crossing the Railway at side road 130 that some evil disposed person had placed a number of ties across the track which might have caused a serious accident on the night train had they not removed them.

An accident happened to a horse belonging to Mr. Richard Douglas of Artemesia one night recently while in the pasture. It appears the beast lay down to roll and got over in a hollow place partly on its back, and so injured himself in struggling for freedom that it is feared he will not fully recover.

The Czar of Russia has at last been crowned and is still in the land of the living notwithstanding the threats of the Nihilist gang to assassinate him before the ceremony was over. The successful carrying out of the coronation ceremonies is certainly a great triumph over Nihilism and it is to be hoped it is only the beginning of the end of the reign of terror.

Mr. James Johnston who kept a hotel in Owen Sound for a great number of years, and who left that place eight years ago, has again opened in the same line in McWilliam's stand, which he is greatly improving. Mr. Johnston is very extensively and favorably known by those who made Owen Sound their market in the past, and who will doubtless be pleased to meet their old friend when in town.

Mr. David Stinson of Artemesia, last Saturday, drove from town rigged out with, a splendid team of spirited horses in prime condition dressed in a fine set of driving harness drawing a first prize carriage. We like to see a farmer who has by economy, good management and honest toil for many years, take comfort, and at the same time have some style about him.

Barn Burned.—About three o'clock on the morning of the 26th ult, Mr. Hugh Simpson, of lot 113, con. 7, St. Vincent, awoke and observed what he at first took to be the light of the moon shining on the woodshed. He arose to satisfy himself and discovered that his barn was afire. The household was roused but too late to save anything. The frame barn and a reaper, drill, cultivator, two harrows, and a quantity of straw and hay were all consumed. The barn was insured for $150, and the contents for $200. Mr. Simpson can hardly tell the amount of his loss, but it is considerably over the insurance. He ascribes the fire to a tramp, being unable to account for it in any other way.—Meaford Monitor.

For Sale.—Lot 4 Sydenham St. Markdale, ½ of an acre. This is a vacant lot along side Mr. Rae's Tailor shop, and would be a prime place for a skating rink, which is much wanted, and would doubtless prove a profitable investement. For particulars and terms apply at this office.

Last Saturday evening, about six o'clock, a fire broke out in the Windsor Hotel, Meaford. The alarm was given, and the brigade, with their new engine, were promptly on the scene, and by strenuous exertions succeeded in getting the fire under control, but not before damage to the extent of about $500 had been done.

In the fishing party accident, at Flesherton, last week, two of the persons were seriously hurt, Mr. Aikenhead (of Aikenhead & Crombie, Toronto) had several ribs fractured, and is not yet able to leave his bed. The back seat was not properly fastened, and caused all the trouble.

Accident.—One night last week, one of Mr. B. Wright's horses became cast on its side in the manger, where the beast was found in the morning, It was found, after extricating, the mare from the awkward position that a bone in the shoulder was broken, and it is feared the annimal will not fully recover. The loss will be heavy as it is a valuable mare.

Mr. Walter Taylor, 11 line Euphrasia has built 200 feet of picket fence in front of his residence which he has just finished painting together with the wood work of his brick house. You would scarcely believe what an improvement it made in the appearance of the premises which is now the prettiest place on the line, and very few can compare with it in the village Mr. Maybee did the painting.

On Saturday night a shoemaker named Alexander, who had been working for Mr. W. A. McKee, of this place, entered the shop, and having selected some good stock to the amount of about $25, immediately departed northwards. He was captured at Markdale, along with his booty, and taken before Mr. Wm. Brown, J. P., of that place, by whom he was committed for trial. He was sent down to the jail at Orangeville, on Monday evening,—Shelburne Free Press.

The following clipping has been handed to us by a young lady for publication. It suits the street corner loafers well:—"Wanted, about seventy young men, of all shapes and sizes, from the tall, graceful young dandy, with a base-ball moustache (nine hairs on a side), down to the little hump-backed, carroty-headed, weazle-eyed up-start. The object is to form a gaping corps to be in attendance at the street corners each Sunday during summer, before and after divine service to stare at females as they pass, and to make delicate and gentlemanly remarks on their person and dress. All who wish to enlist in the above corps will appear at the various street corners on Sunday, both Morning and evening, when they will be dully inspected, and their names personal appearance, and quantity of brains registered in a book kept for that purpose, and to be published. To prevent a general rush, it will be well to state that none will be enlisted possessing intellectul capacity superior to that of a well bred donkey."

BRIDGET'S STORY.

Wel', miss, you see the trouble is, Ellen gets a bit religious now an' then, an' spends more time prayin' than may be the Lord requires of a woman as 'as a big family to see to. She's a nice woman tho', an' 'as a good 'ead to 'er, steadier nor 'er 'usband's. 'E's stylish-like, an' 'e 'd be pleased if she'd go with finer sort o' company nor she do. She just laughs at 'im, an' says, "Oh, bah, John, you'll never catch me a-runnin' after my betters. Them as was good enough for us when we was yoong is good enough now we is old."

"'E'd like me," says she, "to be dressed n satin from Monday to Saturday, let alone Sunday; an' 'ow would the washin' an' the bakin' fare then?"

I think mysel' Ellen had the rights of it. She's just a common, nice body, an' what 'ould be the use o' 'er trickin' 'ersel' out like a gran' leddy? It's only people in this country as try to make themsel's look yoong, an' finer nor their condition. I think it's ridic'lous for owld women to fix themsel's out like yoong wenches. I like to see the quality dress up, but it's not allays the gran'-est as go the gayest. I remember, in England, the first time the Queen coom to Chatsworth after she was married. The Duke 'ad an eye on the Queen when she was yoong, an' she coom there; an' for five or six weeks before, all the gentry was givin' the owld women round about new petticoats an' new shoes, so 's they should look nice for the Queen to see. I 'ad a sister in service at Chatsworth, an' so we went over there from where we lived in Lancashire. I 'm Irish born, you know, but we'd lived in Lancashire since I wur a little child, an' folks say as I spake nayther like the Irish nor the English. I'm just 'alf an' 'alf, a kind of a mixed creatur' at best. I know the Lancashire di-log, but I don't spake it often; my father never liked to hear it in the 'ouse, for he wur an educated man. Well, we took a spring cart an' drove to Chatsworth, the night before the Queen coom, an' we lodged in a public 'ouse, the whole on us in one room, all but my father, as 'ad a friend in the town, an owld man, who took 'im 'ome to 'is 'ouse.

The next day we went to the park, an' they ranged us along to see the sight, with the smaller children in front. An' when the Queen coom, why, she 'ad on just a black silk gown, with never a flounce nor a tuck on it,—not so much as a tuck. She wore mud boots, too, laced up at the side, an' 'er 'air brought down on 'er forehead, an' then brushed back plain, an' twisted behind 'er 'ead; not a fashionable knob, nayther,—nothing but a little twist. She coom along, an' behind was the nurse with the Queen's child, carryin' it out so in 'er arms; an' the Queen spoke to the woman, an' she coom close to where we was stan'in', so's I put out my 'and an' touched the child's dress, as was long, an' soft, an' white. She 'eld it down so's we could all see it, an' then another maid took it an' carried it off to show to the people in another part o' the park.

Then two men took the gran' cushions out o' the Queen's carriage, an' lifted all the lads an' wenches into the carriage. Eh, but they throwed themsel's back an' sat down, afore they were lifted out the other side. They went streamin' in an' out, an' I was among 'em. I have sat in the Queen's carriage!

Aw well,—it's a long road from the Queen at Chatsworth to Ellen McKiernan an' 'er man up 'ere, but now my lines are cast among such as the McKiernans.

Mr. McKiernan is a bit yoonger nor she, an' 'e 's like a man yoonger nor 'e is, an' that, I think, 'elps to make a little trouble between 'em, off an' on. Then Tom, the eldest boy, is 'is father's idol; but when the lad took to bad ways, drinkin', idlin' nights, an' gamblin', Ellen did not like it, an' fussed about it, while the father, as ought to ha' known better, said,—

"Whisht, let the lad alone. Yoong men must 'ave their fling. I was just like 'im at 'is age."

"The more shame to you!" cried Ellen, "for tellin' on it afore the childer, an' spakin' light o' the laws of God 'n' man."

So she turned to Tom, an' says she, "Tom, I worked in the mill day-times, an' I worked in the 'ouse nights, when I was the mother of seven small childer; an' you, as 'as nothin' but a man's part to do in this world, 'ill never know 'ow 'ard a woman's lot can be. I never shirked my work, for I wanted to give you schoolin', an' 'ave you larn a good trade. I kept you at school till you was fourteen, when all yer mates went in the mill at twelve year old, an' yoonger; an' now you're twenty, you've larned the machinist's trade, you can do for yersel', an' I won't put up with your coomin' 'ome late nights, makin' a row, bringin' drink an' bad company in the 'ouse, an' tachin' bad ways to your brothers an' sisters. If you cannot coom peaceable, an' in due season, you must go somewheres else to board."

She spoke up pretty fierce, but she had n't no more thought the lad 'ould go away nor she 'ad that the man in the moon 'ould coom down to live wid her. But the father said as if the boy went 'e 'd go too; an' then she wur mad, an' says she,—

"Ye 'd better be off wid ye, John McKiernan, than stoppin' at 'ome, uphowldin' the boy in bad ways. A man o' your age! Ye 'd better be on your knees a-sayin' your prayers."

Then the father an' son marched off, 'oldin' up their 'eads like soldiers; an' they both stopped out late that night, an' coom 'ome a-roarin' an' singin'. John McKiernan is quite a pote; 'e makes little rhymes, an' puts the words in their places so 's the verses coom out right; an' when 'e coom into the kitchen, a-racketin' an' a-knockin' over the chairs in the dark, 'e was singin' away verses about Ellen 'ersel', as 'e 'd made up. She 'eard 'im, but she spake never a word, only bolted 'er bedroom door fast; while 'e begins to sing, When I was a Bachelor, an owld Irish song, as I 'ave 'eard my father sing when I was a bit of a girl. There's not manny folk as know it now. I can say it in Irish an' English both. 'E shouted out in the dead o' night, the most aggeravatin' of all the verses:—

"I fancied the mopsey,
Her fortune 'as deceived me,
It makes me cry an' often sigh,
The shirt I cannot wear it.

"When I rise in the morning,
I go to my labor,
I never do coom 'ome,
Till duskes coomes on fairly.

"I find me cabin dirty,
An' me bed, it 's in bad order,
Me wife is cabin hearing,
An' me baby always bawlin'."

That was n't a pleasin' song for Ellen to 'ear, an' it wur n't true, nayther; for she 's not a mopsey, but a clean, decent body, as keeps a nice 'ouse, an' does n't run round to the neighbors no more 'n is reasonable for a live woman, as does n't expect to wrap 'ersel' up in a sheet, an' keep as distant from folks as a ghost.

When 'e 'ad finished the verses, an' was just beginnin' again When I was a Bachelor, McKiernan tries the bedroom door, an' finds it locked on 'im. So then 'e swears, an' Ellen spakes for the first time, an' calls through the key-hole,—

"I've got the childer in 'ere, an' I've spent the night a-prayin' for you. You an' Tom may go up to the attic; an' my counsel is for you to get on yer knees yersel'."

Then there was more row, an' at the last Mr. McKiernan an' 'is son both posted off; an' the Lord knows where they passed the night.

In the mornin' the father coom an' fetched 'is clothes an' the lad's, an' they both took board together nigh to the mill, where Mr. McKiernan is a spinner.

Ellen took it pretty lofty at first.

"It 's well they 're away," said she. "The owld man was daft about the lad, an' I'll not deny 'e 's a 'andsome, well-lookin' boy; but if there 'd 'a' been a robbery or a murder in the street, an' Tom 'ad been arrested on us, we could not have accounted for 'im, for 'alf the time we did not know where 'e was. As for the man, we 've lived together two an' twenty year, an' now, if 'e 's minded to go away, I'll niver go after 'im, nor ask 'im to coom back,—no, not so much as walk by Mrs. Flinn's 'ouse, where 'e boards. I counseled 'im in good ways, an' the ways o' the church, an' I'll not make any lamentation because 'e 's gone. It's every day such things 'appen, a man leaves 'is woman. Lettin' alone is the best treatment for 'em."

For all 'er talk, I often seed 'er eyes was red, an' she went to church steadier 'n ever, an' she 'ad the childer an' 'ersel' a prayin' a good bit o' the time.

There was another in trouble, too, an' that was little Rosie Roberts, a pretty girl, with yellow 'air as looks like a dandelion. She'd set 'er 'eart on Tom McKiernan, but 'er folks was always agin it. They was pretty ighty-tighty people. The mother kep' a store, an' the father was on the train. They looked 'igh for Rosie, an' the mother watched 'er like a cat. They was Protestants too, an' the difference of religion made troubles both sides. For my part, I think as we all worships the same God,—still, I confess as what he 'as ordained he 'as ordained, an' it 'll stan' forever; an' them as does n't go to mass misses a blessing, sure, as they might 'ave; for the mass is a holy thing as 'ull do anybody good, an' not Catholics alone.

I 'm not goin' to say as it 's well for Protestants an' Catholics to wed, but I always liked Rosie, an' when I see 'ow 'er 'eart was set on Tom, I was such a great fool as I thought the religion 'ould not make so much 'arm, for she wur not one to argue, an' I wished Tom 'ould behave himsel' an' marry 'er, an' be a good man to 'er, for I does like to see young folks 'appy.

But, oh, when Tom was out o' 'is mother's eye, it seemed as if 'e would go to the devil straight, for Mr. McKiernan could no more manage the lad nor a three-year old child could fly a six-foot kite. The boy went from bad to worse, an' Mr. Roberts forbade 'im the 'ouse entirely, an' Rosie's eyes was redder 'n Ellen's.

I coomed by Mr. Roberts' one night, an' I seed Rosie hangin' over the gate, talkin' with Tom, outside. There was a bright moon, an' I seed the sad look was gone from 'er bonny face, which was all dimples an' smiles. But as I was a-staring at 'er, out coom Mr. Roberts, like a turkey gobbler rushin' at a red flag, an' dragged Rosie in, swearin' as she should not go to shame right out of 'er father's door. Tom started after, but Rosie cried out for 'im to go away; an' Missis Roberts an' a lot more women coom out, a-talkin' and yellin', an' they got the girl, in, an' shut the door, an' left Tom outside fightin' wid Rosie's brother.

I coom away then, for I spied the policeman a-coomin' up the street; an' that's a sight as 'as a won'erful power to put a stop to an old woman's curiosity.

I went into Missis Roberts's store the next day, an' Rosie was there, with 'er little sister in 'er lap,—a baby as is fretful, an' always wants summun to be settin' under 'er. Rosie looked very pale, but 'er mother looked black. The super of the Sunday-school was there, a sayin',—

"Missis Roberts, I'm very sorry as Rosie should ha' set gossip goin' about 'er."

Then Missis Roberts rose up to 'er feet an' flung out 'er 'and at the girl, an' says, "There, Rosie! do ye 'ear that? Perhaps you'll mind what your mother says after this, an' not wait till the stones in the streets is a hollain' out my very words, an' cryin' shame on ye."

"Oh," said the super, tryin' then to quiet the mother down, "I've no manner o' doubt Rosie 'll be a good girl after this."

'E spoke to the baby, an' 'e said as 'e 'd like to buy some tape, an' so 'e got away; but Rosie said never a word to 'im, only grew whiter 'n' whiter, an' let 'er 'ands fall down at 'er side, so 's the baby 'ad to 'old 'er own little back up.

While the super was buyin' the tape, I said to Rosie,—

"'Ad you been walkin' with Tom, last night?"

"Yes," she said; "we 'd walked from the grocer's. I only met 'im by chance."

"But you like 'im," said I, "an' 'e 's a wild lad."

"We never 'ad no love talk," said she; an' then, in a minute more, she spoke again: "I'll never stay 'ere to be talked about."

Then the mother coom back to us, an' I went out o' the store.

Sure enough, the girl runned away, an' then there was more talk than ever about 'er.

Ellen coom out in the middle of the day to tell me, though she was doin' a bleach, an' 'ad not so much as a shawl about 'er. She'd just run out in 'er figger. She cried, an' said as 'ow Tom was good enough for any girl in the place: an' one minute she vowed 'e was too good for a girl as 'ould do such a shameful thing as run away from 'ome, an' next she 'd say that Rosie was a sweet innocent thing, an' she 'oped she'd see 'er Tom's wife yet, an' it was only people's goin' back an' forth an' tellin' things as 'ad ever made any trouble. She was just distraught, an' she said whatever coom into 'er silly 'ead; so at last it coom out that when Tom 'ad 'eard as Rosie was gone 'e 'ad quit work, an' was on a spree then.

"An' I've not seen 'im," cried 'is mother; "I only 'ear about 'im on the street,—my eldest born!"

I met Tom a day or two after on the street, an' I went up to 'im, an' laid a 'and on 'is arm. I looked 'im steady in the eye, an' 'e reddened a bit, an' 'is mouth trembled like a baby's.

"Tom," said I, "what's the use of a fine lad like you goin' to the bad, when 'e might just as easy go to the good, an' make 'is friends all 'appy?"

"It's not many friends I 'as," said the young fellow. "You know, Bridget, I'd never 'a' done 'arm to Rosie; but she runs away, when she 'ears 'er name mentioned with mine, as if I was the plague."

"Oh," said I, "you think you'd never 'a' done 'er 'arm; but it's little lads know what they'll coom to do as keeps bad company, an' takes no counsel but their own wild wishes. She runned to save 'ersel',—a wise little body! Go after 'er, Tom, bring 'er 'ome to be your mother's daughter, an' make up your mind once for all to be a decent, steady man."

I don't know what got into me to speak them words, but when 'e 'eared me, first 'e grew white, an' then 'e grew red.

"You're a wise woman, too," said he, an' 'e walked away, an' the next day they telled me 'e 'ad gone from the town.

The Robertses soon 'eared from Rosie, 'ow she 'ad got a good place with a rich family in Fall River; so they thought it best to leave 'er there. But where Tom was we did not know.

Well, Ellen took it 'ard, an' she seemed to feel the father's bein' away more, now Tom was clean gone; an' yet the man did not coom back. She'd stan' at 'er door at night, an' strain 'er eyes lookin' towards the mill, where McKiernan worked, but she never see 'im coomin' towards 'er. Eh, but women is queer creatur's, cryin' an' scoldin' an' sputterin', yet lovin' all the while.

She fell sick, bein' so worried, an' one night I stayed wid 'er. I was dozin' in the kitchen, when I 'eared a great crash; I runned into the other room, an' there Ellen lay on the floor, wid 'er eyes wide starin' open, an' 'er limbs stretched out on the boards, an' in one 'and she 'ad a lock o' 'er own 'air, as she'd pulled out.

"Oh," cried I, "'ow long 'ave you been there?"

"Whisht, whisht!" says she. "Do ye 'ear the music?"

"Music!" says I. "Are ye mad?

"Oh," says she, "it's gran' music; an' do ye see the fine yoong ladies; as is makin' it? There they is, all stan'in' round against the wall. Look at e'm, dressed in white, an' with bells on their fingers!

She was so wild, I was scared, an' I humored 'er a bit, an' I said as I 'eared 'em an' seed 'em, an' coaxed 'er the while back to bed.

She laid 'er 'ead down on the pillow, an' fetched a great sigh. "Ah," says she, "they're just vanishin', vanishin', an' the music 's a-fadin' away."

Then she wrung 'er 'ands an' fell a-cryin', an' I 'ad plenty o' work that night to do, carin' for 'er. But she mended fearful 'at after, an' in a day or two she was quite well.

Then she went to the priest, an' telled 'im 'er trouble: 'ow Mr. McKiernan 'ad been a very good 'usband an' very agreeable to 'er for twenty-two years, an' 'ow 'ard she thought it as 'e should leave 'er now; an' she towld 'im all about Tom, too.

Father Kent treated 'er very kind, an' says 'e:

"I cannot 'elp ye about Tom. Yoong men will 'ave their fling; an' any way, 'e 's beyond my reach. Ye can do nought but pray for 'im, as was always a mother's work, from the time of the Blessed Virgin. As for your 'usband, I'll see to 'im."

Ellen coomed 'ome wid a lighter 'eart, an' waited, wid 'er little ones around 'er, for the coomin' o' the man.

Father Kent went twice to the mill to see Mr. McKiernan, an' the second time the man got mad, an' spake up saucy, an' said queer things to the priest.

"I don't doubt, Father Kent," says 'e, "as you're a scholard an' a gentleman, an' I knows you're a priest, but you needn't coom meddlin' with me."

Then Father Kent stamped 'is foot, an' says 'he,

"You 've 'eared what I 'ad to say, McKiernan. Go ye 'ome to your wife, an' don't force me to coom again about this business."

An' that night Mr. McKiernan went 'ome. Ellen telled me all about it. She wur stan'in' at the table cuttin' out a dress for a neighbor; for she's very handy at such things, an' willin' to do little jobs o' that sort for anybody. It was about nine in the evenin', an' as she stood with her back to the door in stalked Mr. McKiernan, lookin' as sour as a boy as 'as been licked. Ellen's 'eart gave a jump, but she never said nothin' nor turned round, only caught a side glance of 'im as 'e went past 'er.

'E sat down in a chair, an' 'e kicked off first one shoe, an' then another; an' all the while 'er scissors wur goin' faster than ever. When 'e 'd sat still about five minutes, up 'e got, an' stamped away to 'is room. Then Ellen turned an' threw up 'er arms wid a great swoop, an' says she, 'alt aloud,—

"Lord save us, see the ghost!" An' the little childer began to titter at that.

"Shut up," says she, "laughin' at your dad."

But little Peter, he giggled on, an' the father growled from the other room; so Ellen caught up the boy, an' rocked 'im, an' hugged 'im, an' got 'im quiet. She was that glad 'er 'usband 'ad coom 'ome, I think, she did not care 'ow mad an' glum 'e acted.

When Mr. McKiernan came out for 'is breakfast, the next mornin', Ellen flew to the table, an' began movin' some dishes.

"I'll clear off Peter's things," said she.

"Oh," said Mr. McKiernan, "ye like to 'ear yersel' talk;" an' 'e shoveled in 'is meat, an' said no more, till she asked 'im, timid like, should she send 'is dinner to the mill.

"Are n't ye the housekeeper?" says 'e, sharp again. "Ye like to 'ear yersel' talk;" an' off 'e went to 'is work.

That afternoon, I was goin' by, an' Ellen called me to coom in.

"I must go 'ome an' feed my cat," said I.

She laughed. "Hoot wi' yer cat," says she. "I hunted 'er off o' my chickens the other day. Coom in; it's summat better worth 'hearin' nor a cat's meowin', as I 'ave to tell ye."

So I stopped in, an' she made me laugh till my sides ache, a mimickin' all Mr. McKiernan's gran' ways an' sour looks. But she stopped in 'er laughin' an' cried a bit, sayin',—

"I'm the wretchedest mother in the town," says she; "an' Father Kent says 'e could not 'elp me about Tom."

So wantin' to cheer 'er, I says,—

"Mr. McKiernan only shows 'is good sense in coomin' 'ome, Ellen. There's not a woman I knows as keeps as cheerful a kitchen."

"It 'ould not ha' been cheerful long, says she, "if 'e 'ad not coom. for I'm near out o' money."

"Well, 'e is coom," says I. "And now you must keep 'im. What did you send 'im for 'is dinner?"

"Beefsteak," says she, catchin' up little Peter, as 'ad been pullin' at 'er knee, an' suckin' at a lump o' sugar.

"That 's right," says I. "Now you must ha' summat good for 'is supper."

"Yes," says she. "What do yo think on?"

"Scollops," says I.

"What's them?" says she, takin 'old of Peter's 'ands, an' swingin' 'im down to the floor, an' then bringin' 'im up again on 'er knees, and 'e a-laughin' till 'e almost choked.

"A kind o' fish," says I. "I'll be bound Mr. McKiernan 'ull like 'em. Send Katie down to the market for 'em, They'll be about thirty cents a quart."

So she said she would, an' I seed she felt quite 'appy, so I picked up my shawl an' the pail of milk I was takin' 'ome, an' trudged on to my cellar an' my cat

The next day was Sunday, an' as I was coomin' 'ome from church, when I got opposite Mr. McKiernan's 'ouse, Ellen, as was stan'in' in the door, not 'avin' took off 'er bonnet, called to me.

"Just stop to dinner, Bridget!" says she.

"Nay, nay," says I. "A family likes to 'ave its Sunday dinner to theirsel's."

Her face clouded, but Mr. McKiernan, as was smokin' in the yard, says,—

"Coom in, Bridget; there's always a seat for you at my table."

So seein' 'im so cordial, I went in; an' Ellen, I thought, was glad not to be left much alone wid 'im. I sat there till about three, when 'e marches up to 'is wife an' speaks very pleasant, an' says, "Just make me a cup o' tea, Ellen;" an' up she jumps, with smiles all over 'er face, to do it. Then I thought they was gettin' friendly, an' I coomed away.

But she bade me to coom in the very next night, for she said she 'ad to ask 'im for money, an' she felt she 'd be bolder to do it if I was by. So Monday evening I was there before duskes. They was always a family as provided well, the way I like to see folks do,—'alf a barrel o' flour, an' 'alf a keg o' butter, an' a whole ham at a time; but while Mr. McKiernan was off, Ellen 'ad been put to it to keep things up, an' 'ad run low in every way.

After we 'ad 'ad a good supper, she picked up Jimmy, one o' the little boys; an' while Peter hung on 'er knees, she poked 'er fingers careless-like into the 'oles in Jimmy's shoes, till 'e squealed out as she tickled 'im, an' says he,—

"Mammy, I want some new shoes."

"Eh," says I; "let 's see the shoes ye 've got on."

Then the little fellow twisted round in 'is mother's lap, an' stuck out 'is two feet to me.

"They're awful bad," says the boy. An' Mr. McKiernan spoke up from the table, where 'e sat readin' an owld paper:

"Why don't you get 'im some shoes, Ellen?"

'E spoke gently, an' Ellen laughed, an' says she,—

"I never knew shoes to coom walkin' into a 'ouse without feet in 'em, or feet goin' after 'em."

"An' money, too," says I.

"Don't ye 'ave no paper, now?" says Mr. McKiernan, takin' no notice of what we 'd been a-sayin'.

"No," says Ellen. "There wa' n't nobody to read it, an' I stopped it."

"Well," says 'e, risin' up, "I'll go an' give an order for one to be left every night, after this."

"That 'll be good," says Ellen, bent on pleasin' 'im. "for I did miss 'earin' you talk about the news."

Then she played some more with Jimmy's shoes; an' says 'e again, like a little parrot,—

"Mammy, I want some shoes."

"Ah," says the mother, "I'd give you some quick, if I 'ad the money; but fifty cents won't buy ye shoes, now you've growed so big."

Mr. McKiernan 'ad got on 'is coat by this time, an' says 'e, in a lofty way,—

"Give me your fifty cents, Ellen, an' I'll give you a ten-dollar bill for it."

Ye may be sure, she was n't no great time makin' that change; an' 'e went out o' the 'ouse, an' she clapped on 'er bonnet an' shawl, an' started off 'ersel' for the shoes.

They coomed back together, talkin' an' carryin' parcels like a couple of young sweet-'earts, an' I just laughed at 'em. As we all stood round, with the childer 'angin' on our legs, the door burst open, an' in coom Tom an' Rosie.

"Holloa!" cried Tom; an' Ellen fetched a screech, an' rushed at the lad as if she 'd smother 'im; but Rosie stood apart, with a shy look in 'er eyes an' a blush on 'er cheek, till Tom left 'is mother, an' took the girl's 'and, an' said, like a man,—

"I went after 'er, an' one day, as she was washin' dishes, I coom softly into the kitchen; an' when she looked up she saw me, an' she cried out, an' let the oup fall as she was 'oldin', an' it broke, an' out coom the missus to know what was the matter; an' I telled 'em both together as I'd made up my mind to be a steady fellow, an' I'd coom to marry Rosie; an' Rosie, she made believe as she did n't care about me, till the missus laughed, an' bade 'er speak the truth; an' then"—

"Now, Tom, you need n't say no more," said Rosie; an' Mr. McKiernan marched up to 'er, an' says, very courteous-like,—

"I'll make ye kindly welcome to be my son's wife."

"Eh, but she's that already!" cried Tom. "We was married a week ago."

Everybody screamed but Ellen, who just throwed 'er arms round the girl's neck an' hugged er 'ard.

Mrs. Hopkins' Bonnet.

I should have taken a sight of livin' in M—— if it hadn't been Wilson. She was the tastiest dresser I ever see. Every thing she put on, well, if it want nothin' but a rag it. If there was anything pretty she it. She come over to our house one and we got to speakin' about bonnets, calculating to wear the one I had mer before. She said she was going a new one and asked me if I had one in Miss Evans' window. Said I, "I don't know when I ever see a that took my eye as that one, and I have it. It is a perfect beauty."

"What kind of bunnit is it?" I

"It is a beautiful white Dunstable med with cream-colored ribbon and roses," said she.

After she had gone I kept thinking that bunnit. Here was a chance could git ahead of Miss Watson.

Wal, the end of it was I got up morning bound to have that bunnit. as soon as I got my work done up, I my things and started for Miss Brown and sure enough, the first thing I window was that bunnit. I tried it looked well; it was a handsome no mistake. It wasn't the fashion have ties, but an elastic cord held and there was long ends hanging hind.

Wal, I paid the six dollars home with the bunnit.

When John come tu dinner, he was a man goin' tu lecture that had been livin' mong the Ingins and ed to go and hear him. I thought be a good chance to wear my new I said right off that I wanted tu wasn't long goin' tu the hall. down the top of the buggy and I out.

The man had just got up to went in; the hall was about full, went clear up front, and got some was glad of it, 'twas a good chance my bunnit. I saw Miss Wilson thing and thinks I tu myself, I has got the prettiest bunnit this I saw folks looking a good deal der smilin', and some young girls right behind began to giggle. John looked around at me. Now took no notice of my clothes; he tell calico from cashmere; but he in at me, and I thought my bunnit very becomin' for John to take notice of it.

Just then he whispered to me "For massy sake! what did you without your bunnit for?"

I put my hand to my head, enough, my bunnit was gone. of it, Matildy; there I was, in of folks, right up in front, with on, and that little horn comb to bunnit on stickin' in my hair. you, I wished I could sink the floor. I was so 'shamed I didn't what to du. I never thought the bunnit, where it had gone nor I only wanted to git out of that did. I don't know how I ever spunk to do it, but anythin' was sittin' there and everybody laughin'

John followed me out, and it was did, for I almost had a hysteric fit. and I laughed. He tried to talk tell me it wa'nt no matter, that folks noticed it, but that only made worse. Hadn't I seen them laughin' I told him he must take me home got the buggy, and when I went to if there wa'nt my bunnit lyin' in the buggy.

You see, when John let down back, one of the long ends of caught some way, and the bunnit drawn right off my head. Come to it, the elastic cord hadn't been and had pulled off; that was why slipped off so easy. I tell you, pride had a fall. I never took comfort wearin that bunnit. But good lesson tu me. I gave up tryin up with Miss Wilson.

Wal, there, I didn't notice how gettin'. I must hurry round and kittle on—thought I would make cream toast for supper. John is hand for it.

Chinese and Japanese.

In a social sense, there is hardly difference between the lower and whites in New York than between and Japanese. The latter element small. The few Japanese in the either connected with Japanese houses, with branches in New York, dents in colleges or the higher schools business men, the Japanese seem wide awake as our smartest old New ers, and don't seem to lack even the bial Yankee push. One of the largest ness houses of this city is a Japanese lishment on Broadway, near Union Most of the Japanese engaged in can speak English nearly as well as own tongue. They are noted for and a close attention to the wishes the whims of customers, and all with them feel that they are well They adapt themselves to the and business tone of their surroundings most as readily as if they were of the race. They all live well, and formed very pleasant social connections know of one, the manager of a large house, whose home is one of the New York. He is a regular church, whither he was led by his intelligent young woman, before riage, and his household includes teresting children, with only a their father's race in their appearance. Japanese go to theatres and the opera times to other social resorts, and to ter-places in summer. They become zens, and identify themselves with munity in general. In a business are a valuable accession to New York their number were larger it would be better for the city. It is about two years since the arrival of a party of ese, including the famous "Tommy got an immense deal of petting, Yorkers a novel sensation. The now here seem as much at home as had been with us from the first only since the war.

It is estimated that 160,000,000 wire fence were made in the United last year.

MR HOLLAND'S LITTLE DEMON.

...ced Through a Shop Window and ...ken to Pamrapo for Experiment.

...September, 1882, a sign has been ...ayed on the door of an upper room in ...s Gannon's brass foundry, Jersey ... It read: "Positively no Admit- ... This means You." Within the ... workmen were building a working ...el of a submarine torpedo boat invented ...ohn Phillip Holland. On account of ...mall size not more than two men ...d work on it at once, and they drag- ...along until last week, when it was ...pleted.

...e door was opened and a reporter ...ched half a dozen men launching the ...ssel out the front window and down ...e of skids to a waggon waiting in the ...et below. The new craft is what is com- ...ly but untruthfully called cigar-shaped. ...s the exact shape of a double-cone fish- ...bbs. It is 16 feet 9 inches long and ...ches in diameter. The shell contains ...rakes of boiler iron, the upper strakes ...e three-sixteenths of an inch thick and ...bottom strakes one-quarter of an inch. ...reinforced with six rings of T iron. Un- ...both the bow and stern are keels four ...a half feet long, the one under the bow ...s made of lead and weighing 218 ...nds. The rudder is hung to the stern ...post. On each side of the rudder is hung ...horizontal rudder, or fin, that works on ...the principle of a balance rudder. The two ...work together. When the forward ends of ...the rudders are raised while the vessel ...is driven through the water they naturally ele- ...vate the stern of the vessel and depress its ...bow, causing it to dive under the water. ...When they are held in that position and ...the empty compartments made for the pur- ...pose are filled with water, the vessel will ...sink below the surface. For the present ...the new boat will be propelled by a wheel ...seven inches in diameter, with 18 inches pitch. ...The wheel will be turned by a treadle un- ...til Mr. Holland completes a new chemical ...engine.

...On the top of the vessel, one-third of the ...way forward, is hinged a circular dome of ...iron. A ring of rubber makes an air- ...tight joint when the dome is secured. There ...are nine skylights in the dome, each about ...eight inches. A small iron trough ...runs forward from the dome over the mid- ...dle line of the vessels length. It contains ...the steam pipe, and is a part of the ap- ...paratus for handling the torpedo. The dis- ...placement of the vessel, loaded, is 2,800 ...pounds.

...The craft contains a number of new ideas ...not utilized in the one made at Delamater ...Iron Works, in 1881. Just what these im- ...provements are Mr. Holland declines to say, ...because they have not yet been patented, ...but they include methods for handling tor- ...pedoes and supplying fresh air to those ...within. With the treadle power Mr. Hol- ...land says he can reach a speed of from three ...to four knots an hour. When the new en- ...gine is in place he thinks the speed for ...short distances will be as high as ten ...knots.

...This is Mr. Holland's third working ...boat. The first was completed in 1878. ...Speaking of it and his work on the others ...he said: "The first one was successful, al- ...though the engines did not work. It de- ...monstrated that a submarine vessel could ...be handled. We worked it by taking steam ...through a hose from a steam launch. The ...engine I got from the Delamater Works, ...in 1881. I took it to the docks of ...Commodore Vanderbilt Morris, at Fort Hamilton, ...where I kept it ten months. He witnessed ...many experiments with it. I have travelled ...under the lower bay beneath the water. ...I ran her into the mud banks at full ...speed. She always rebounded. We were ...often fifty feet below the surface at times. I ...have been down under water as long as two ...and a half hours. That is much longer than ...would be necessary in warfare. Half an ...hour or fifteen minutes would enable one to ...reach the necessary distance to fix a tor- ...pedo to a vessel's keel. We demonstrated ...that this could be done by actual experi- ...ment. The papers had a good laugh over ...what they thought was a failure. I was an ...old man and kept my secrets to myself. ...There was conclusive evidence of Fenianism, ...and I was at once decided that I was building ...a boat to encourage servant girls to contri- ...bute to the skirmishing fund. The fact is, ...I do not belong to any society, and do not ...intend to do so. I have gone into this busi- ...ness on principles. When my experiments ...are complete and the value of certain ideas ...is determined, I will be looking for capital- ...ists to form a joint stock company to build ...submarine vessels.'

"Have you ever had any accidents under ...water?"

"My engineer, M. L. Richards, did. He ...took a dive under a tug near the docks as ...she was putting out into the river. He left ...the manhole open, and, of course, she fill- ...ed. The men on the tug picked him up, as ...I have stated out. He was unconscious for ten ...minutes. When these vessels are properly ...handled before starting there is no danger, ...because a man must attend to business to ...keep them down. If his hand slips, or he ...forgets himself for a minute the boat will ...rise to the surface."

The new boat was taken to Pamrapo where ...the second one is. The experiments will be ...made at Pat McGeihan's shipyard.

A Canadian Natural Curiosity.

About eight miles down the St. Lawrence ...river from Kingston, Ont, and four hundred ...yards from the stream, rises a lofty ridge of ...granite. On the farm of Daniel Mclean, in ...this ridge, are three wells carved out of solid ...rock, which have defied the suppositions of ...the oldest inhabitant as to their intended use. ...These cylinders, only four feet deep and a ...foot and a half in diameter, are hewn out of ...the solid rock which the keenest-tempered tools ...of modern times would scarcely chip, and ...from top to bottom they are as smooth and ...regular as the finest polished Aberdeen ...granite. They always contain a copious ...supply of pure water, which must be supplied ...by rains, as no surface-water, can penetrate ...to them. The popular idea is that therein ...former savages pounded their corn; but the ...diameter of the holes and their disproportion- ...ate depth render that an improbable idea. ...A much more likely theory might be based ...on the rock excavation on the farm of Thomas ...Madden, adjacent, where a small well is ...found. This is, however, of greater circum- ...ference and considerably shallower.

How to Keep Cut Flowers.

A reporter found his way into a florist's the other day, and feasted his eyes and nose on the beautiful buds that lay in bouquets there.

"How long will this clove pink last?" he inquired.

"Oh, with care, a week or ten days. A solid rosebud will last about the same time. There's a good deal in knowing how to keep flowers fresh."

"Do you use any preparations? Any salt in the water, or ammonia, or the like?"

"Not at all. That's all nonsense. All that is necessary to keep flowers fresh is to keep them moist and cool. If people, instead of dipping flowers in water, would simply wrap them up in a wet newspaper, they would find that they would keep far fresher over night. A wet towel or napkin would be too heavy and crush the blooms too much, and, besides, it would allow the moisture to evaporate too easily. See that box of buds? They were packed in Boston on Monday in wet paper, and you might say that they are fresher now than when they came off the bush."

"Why do you send clear to Boston for rosebuds? Haven't you got the same sort of roses here?"

"Exactly the same kind, but they won't grow so nicely here. Take this Boston bud, for example, and put it beside a native bud. They are of exactly the same variety, both being Ben Silenes. But the stem of the Boston bud is far stronger and stouter than that of the native bud. The colors are far more brilliant and the bud is more durable. When the steam is long and thick we don't have to use so much wire to strengthen it, and that makes it much more convenient."

"What advantage has Boston over Cleveland in the raising of roses?"

"It's the climate. It is true that it isn't so warm there as here, and it hasn't been extremely sultry here this winter. But the temperature in a greenhouse is easily enough regulated, as well as the quantity of moisture in the air, and the soil is made just so rich with all gardeners. It can't be because they are any more skillful in raising flowers there than we are here for I know of gardeners who have come here from the East and expected to do the same things they did there, and failed completely. Even in New York the florists sell ten Boston buds to one of their own growth, and it's just so all over the country. You know the more culture bestowed upon a rose the more double it becomes—that is, the more of these stamens turn into petals. Well, I suppose that, as Boston is credited with possessing an atmosphere of 'culchah,' that has something to do with it.—From the Cleveland Herald.

One Woman's Surprise.

Last Saturday afternoon (says The Cape Ann Advertiser, of Gloucester, Mass.,) a young man in this city, who occasionally gets under the influence of intoxicants, told his wife that he intended visiting the dentist and have some teeth extracted. Not returning at the time anticipated, and fearing that he might have poured too large a quantity of spirits down to keep his spirits up during the trying ordeal of tooth-pulling, she went in search of him, passing down the railroad track near the Blue bridge. Here she saw, in the dim light, a man lying directly across the track. Not paying particular attention, and fearful of being molested if she troubled him, she walked on. Just then the whistle of the train at West Gloucester was heard, and, knowing that if the man was not instantly removed from his perilous position he would certainly be killed, she over came her fears of being molested and immediately went to the rescue. She was obliged to roll him over by main strength, and succeeded in getting him into the water-course alongside the track, and had just time to get into a safe position herself when the train went thundering by. Upon further examination of the man, imagne her surprise upon finding him to be her husband. Her feelings at this disclosure can not be imagined, as the thought came into her mind how unwittingly she had come so near passing him by, and what a fate would have been his had she not, upon hearing the whistle, listened to the impression and turned back just in time to save his life. It was a trying ordeal, and, with our informant, we unite in the hope that the lesson may result in making the man a stanch teetotaler during the remainder of his earthly pilgrimage.

Horrors of a Siberian Prison.

The story of Kara has been denied and retold frequently. One of the latest visitors to this notorious spot—said to be a member of the Russian diplomatic service—states that he saw, on entering the enciente of the prison, a number of famished creatures in rags, half naked, trembling with fever, and deeply marked with the ravages of disease. They ran to tell him the story of their suffering, but were brutally dragged away by the jailers, and, balked of their wish, fell back upon some dirt heap, laughing hysterically and rattling their chains. Work is said to start in the Kara mine at 4 a. m. and to continue till 6 p.m. The working gangs are guarded by men armed with sabre revolver and loarded cane. Even subaltern officers can order the punishment of the lash or imprisonment. The lash was made of three leather thongs each ending in a ball of lead, and with this instrument a retaken fugitive received two hundred blows. In the dungeons of Kara the visitor saw several prisoners chained in almost complete darkness. "They were worse nourished," he writes, "than the dogs of the jail. Their legs and arms were fastened together by rings riveted at the ankles and wrists, from, which heavy chains extended. The energy and courage of these men are something extraordinary. They showed me one who was fastened to the wall and kept in one of these dungeons for eight months. Every second day he received ten strokes of the knout. He never saw any light brought by the jailer. Yet nothing could break his will and endurance. Even when the governor came to ask him if he still refused to give up the name of his accomplices, the man merely laughed in his face.

ANOTHER GREAT BRIDGE.

The Canada Southern's Structure Over Niagara.

Work on the foundations of the Canada Southern Railway's great bridge over the Niagara is steadily progressing. The location is at a point 300 feet above the present Suspension Bridge, where the chasm is 859 feet from bluff to bluff. The Railway Company experienced much difficulty in selecting plans from those presented, but finally accepted those of the Central Bridge Works, of Buffalo. The contract requires that the bridge be completed by December 1, 1883, under the forfeiture of $500 a day for each day's delay after that date. The design selected is what is known as the canti-lever bridge, the principle of which is that of a trussed beam, supported at or near its centre, with the arms extending on each side, and one end anchored or counter-weighted to provide for an equal loading. It is in practice an entirely new design, no bridge as yet having been completed upon this principle. The Firth of Forth Bridge in Scotland, with a clear span of 1600 feet, is being built upon this plan, and in this country the Fraser River Bridge, 315 feet clear span, on the Canadian Pacific, is now being constructed after the same plan.

The bridge is to be a double-track bridge, being built to carry upon each track at the same time a freight train of the heaviest kind, extending the entire length of bridge, headed by two "consolidation" engines and a side pressure of 30 pounds per square foot, which pressure is produced by wind having a velocity of 75 miles per hour. Under the above loads the structure is strained to only one-fifth of its ultimate strength. The total length of the bridge proper is 895 feet, divided into two canti-levers of 375 feet on the Canadian and 395 on the American side, supported on steel towers rising from the water's edge. A fixed span of 125 feet is suspended from and connects the river arms of canti-levers. The clear span across the river is 500 feet, being the longest double-track truss span ever built. The excavations are carried down until solid rock is reached, when blocks of "Biton Colguet" 20 feet wide, 45 feet long, and 10 feet thick will be put in. These form one single mass that will withstand a pressure almost equal to the best Quincy granite, and will so distribute the load of 1,600 tons that comes upon each pair of steel columns that it will produce a pressure of but 25 pounds per sq. inch on the natural formation. Upon these Biton blocks, four in number, will be built masonary of the most substantial character, carried up 50 feet above the surface. On these the steel towers rest, rising 130 feet above the masonry, and upon these will set the steel superstructures. The material for this will be subjected to the most rigid inspection and tests from the ore until it enters the completed structure. For erections at the bridge-site temporary scaffoldings, using some 600,000 feet of timber, will be built from the bluff on either side out to the edge of the water, on a level with the top of the bluff. Upon these the shore arms of the canti-levers will be erected, one end resting on the steel towers and the other upon masonry on the bluff. The shore ends will be firmly anchored to this masonry, so that it will take an upliftin; force of 400 tons at each end to displace it. This constitutes the counter-weight to balance the unequal loading on the right arm referred to above; as this, under the most unfavorable conditions, can never equal 200 tons, the provision is ample. After the structure is completed from the shore to the towers comes the difficult part of the work—to span the 500 feet across and 245 feet above a roaring river whose forces no earthly power can stay, and no temporary structure can survive a moment. Here the skill of engineer comes in to baffle nature and laugh at her powers.

The design of the canti-lever is such that, after the shore arm is completed and anchored, as described above, the river arm may then be built out, one panel or section at a time, by means of great travelling derricks, and be self-sustaining as it progresses. After one panel of 25 feet is built and has its bracing adjusted, 10 travelling derricks are moved forward and another panel erected. Thus the work progresses, section by section, until the ends of the canti-lever are reached, when there still remains a gap of 125 feet to close. Into this will be swung and suspended from the canti-lever arms an ordinary truss bridge, forming the connecting link and completing the structure. Compensation for expansion and contraction is provided for by an ingenious arrangement between the ends of the canti-lever and fixed span, allowing the ends to move freely as the temperature changes, but at the same time preserving perfect rigidity against the side pressure from the wind. There will be no guys for this purpose, as in the suspension bridge, but the structure will be completed within itself. Neither will there be any of that wave-motion noticed on a suspension bridge as a train moves over it. When it is considered that it took over 3 years to build the present suspension bridge, which is for a single track, and that this bridge, for a double track, must be finished within seven and a half months from the execution of the contract, some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the operation.—Albany Journal.

As Told by The Hero.

The following is an extract from a letter written from Texas by a young man formerly of Macon to a friend here: "The other night I went into a saloon where there were eight cowboys who had just got in from a long drive. They crowded around me and asked me to set 'em up. Just out of politeness I set 'em up. When they got through they asked me to set 'em up again, and I refused. They crowded around me, evidently taking me for a sucker, and swore they'd eat me up. I stood my ground, and told them if they would let the barkeeper hold their pistols I'd try 'em a few rounds. Then they took out their weapons and gave them to the bar-keeper, and in ten minutes I had whipped all eight of them. They saw I was not to be fooled with and we shook hands. Every time I meet a cowboy now he takes off his hat to me."—Macon Telegraph.

CANING A CONSERVATIVE.

How Dr. Sproule, M. P., got even with Mr. Hugh Chisholm.

Dr. Sproule, M. P., is a grateful man, The member for East Grey, too, is open-handed and large-harted. And he has been manifesting these traits of character in a manner which will cause his constituents in this portion of the riding a considerable amount of pleasure. He has done honor to a gentleman to whom honor is due, and he has done it in that unostentatious manner peculiar to a true gentleman. Mr. Hugh Chisholm, of the firm of H. Chisholm & Co., Meaford, was Dr. Sproule's financial agent at the last general election, and an efficient agent, too, he proved himself to be. He carefully guarded the interest of the candidate, and did so with suavity and in the unassuming way peculiarly his own. Dr. Sproule naturally felt grateful. And as his financial agent would accept of no emolument for the very considerable trouble he had been put to, the worthy docter cast about him for a means to express his gratitude. The result was that on Mr. Chisholm's leaving for home after attending the Conservative banquet at Markdale last week, Dr. Sproule asked him if he could make it convenient to call around to his place before he drove off. Chisholm, in the innocence of a heart that is looking for no favour, did as requested. As he was about to drive away Sproule handed him the most beautiful, gold-cane we have ever had the to examine. It is a perfect beauty must be seen to be thoroughly The gold-head, which is richly engraved on it the following incription in style of the engraver's art :

FROM

DR. SPROULE, M. P.

to his respected

FRIEND,

H. CHISHOLM.

It is unnecessary to say, Chisholm was completely astonished and by surprise, and that he thoroughly ciates the gift of the member for East —Meaford Mirror.

Royalty at the Opera.—A Famous Singer at Home.—Chit-Chat.

The Duchess of Albany.

Victoria's youngest son, Leopold, and his wife, a princess of Pyrmont-Waldeck, now by their titles the Duke and Duchess of Albany, went to see "Henry VIII." at the opera in Paris, and a correspondent of London Truth writes:

"More interesting to me were the occupants of a box on the first tier, and near the stage. As I do not often go to England, I studied its five inmates with curiosity. They were the Duke and Duchess of Albany and the attendants. The Duchess of Albany retains those modest country graces which distinguished her when she arrived in England. She did not take the initiative of making an observation the whole evening. Her royal husband bent over toward her twice or thrice to say a few words. The lady in attendance had an easy carriage, and leaned back in her chair a little so as not to intercept her royal mistress' view of the stage. She did not once open her mouth or appear to notice anything; yet she contrived in acting the effaced part which etiquette demands, to look dignified and even independent. All through, no stock or stone could be more inanimate. Still there seemed an undercurrent of lively intellect. In looking forward the Duchess holds her head a little down. The contrast she presented to the rastoudieres in the first tier, to native fashionable belles, opulent Jewesses, who go in for chic and pschutt, to mondaines whose names are in all the "high-life" journals, was very curious. They solicited attention and enjoyed being stared at. What their tongues could not utter their eyes declared. Their fans were handled with agility, and were used to express passing shades of feeling. The Duchess of Albany made an honest use of hers, only fanning herself when flushed with heat. There was an almost rustic naivete in her deportment. Her ambition is clearly not to shine in the world of fashion, but to cultivate the public and private virtues. Many of the beauties around had plumes of feathers arranged in the court of England style. Others had flowers stuck un peu a la diable into the coiffures. The Duchess had a large pink feather at the side of her head, near the chignon, and about as low down. On the other side she had a diamond ornament of a radiating pattern. The hair over the forehead was frise. Her dress was of a tussore yellow, with Pompadour bouquets woven into it. The corsage at the neck was square cut, and was garnished all round with small, cherry colored bows and little sprays of diamonds. A diamond ornament was suspended from a neck chain.

Jenny Lind at Home.

I had lately the pleasure (says a London correspondent) to enjoy an interview with the great singer at her residence, No. 1 Morton Gardens, Brompton Road, South Kensington. It is a great big house with a generous courtyard and a covered pathway leading through it from the street. There is a gate opened by machinery which communicates with the house, and on its face can be read all sorts of instructions, beginning with "Please ring," "Servants," "Don't knock unless answer required," "Visitors," and so on. These are shown on burnished brass plates that glisten like gold in the midday sun. In compliance with one of these brazen informers I rang the bell, and presently the door was opened by a flunky in all the glory of pink silk stockings and lavishly powdered wig. Being seated in a room that overlooks a well kept lawn, my relief was profound when I heard the "whish" of a silken dress and a hushed female voice giving directions to the Swiss butler, and directly after the angular form of Jenny Lind half filled the doorway.

I should like to tell you about Jenny Lind and what she looks like, but you will have to be satisfied with a few general statements From the crown of her wigged head to the sole of her No. 6 shoe there is not one line of grace or beauty. Her form is angular, her face hard, and her eyes dull and passionless; features irregular and out of harmony, and it seemed to me that one ear was a little higher than the other; her hands are large and vulture shaped, her breast flat and painfully monotonous, and the stiffness of her knees was amply indicated beneath her meagre skirts. She had just been driving, and had thrown off her hat in the hall, and if she would look pretty at any time one would have thought it would have been under such circumstances. The air outside was fresh and crisp; the sky cloudless, and a warm spring sun in full splendour. However, atmosphere seemed to have no beneficial effect upon "madam," who, if possible, looked grayer, harsher, and more colorless by contrast with the beauty of nature outside. Now, I will not try to present Jenny Lind in any exaggerated form to my readers. It was a wild, unrestrained imagination which induced some recent writer to speak of her as beautiful. She must have sung to him as the sirens did to the sailors of the east, until their senses were charmed away, the one of hearing alone remaining to fill the offices blindly for all the rest. When he made the statement that she was beautiful I can readily imagine that he was still under the influence of her divine voice.

Chit-Chat.

Shop girl, to seedy-looking customer: "What do you wish?" "Two paper collars and a piece of rubber."

If a woman looses her voice driving out chickens, could she be called a blacksmith? She certainly would be a hoarse-shewer.

A Pittsburgh female physician says: "Women can understand women." All we've got to say is, if she can she's mighty smart.

A trade paper called The Corset is talked of. It will, no doubt, "come to stay."—Ex. Come Tuesday? It might be delayed to Weddin(s)day.

"I was so mad at George last night," said a girl of her sweetheart. "Yes," said her ill-natured brother, "I noticed when I looked in the parlor you were up in arms."

"Mary must have a summer bonnet," remarked Mrs. Rattler to her husband this morning, "and I think I will have my old straw pressed over for her." "A 'chip' off the old block, I suppose,' rejoined R.

A wicked husband: "Oh, dear!" sighed Mrs. P., with a toothache. "Why can't people be born without teeth?" "If you will reflect a moment, my dear," replied Mr. P., "you will be convinced that such is the fact."

"Say, Mrs. Bunson," said a little girl to a lady visitor, "do you belong to a brass band?" "No, my dear." "I thought you did." "Why did you, my child?" "Because mamma said you was always blowing your own horn."

The New York Sun says that every lady in the land should know how to swim. It might be just as well to have all the men learn how to swim first; then they could have the fun of teaching the women at the seashore, in summer.

A Tennessee landlord has just been forced to pay $700 for kissing an Indiana woman who was a guest at his hotel. As it is only 10 cents to kiss the prettiest girl at a church fair, this man will never cease to kick himself for his financial folly.

At a wedding in Harlem, N. Y., where the bride was very dilatory in arriving at the church, a lady remarked concerning the affair: "Well, the idea of that women being late in getting here when she has been waiting twenty-six years for just such a chance as this."

A piece of her mind: "I would like to see Mrs. Smith," said Mrs. Brownloe; "I'd give her a piece of my mind." "Quite generous of you," remarked her friend, "but perhaps she would never find any more use for it than you, Mrs. Brownloe."

Two young ladies in the country were standing by the side of a wide ditch, which they did not know how to cross. They appealed to a boy who was coming along the road for help, whereupon he pointed behind them with a startled air and yelled "Snakes!" The young ladies crossed the ditch at a single bound.

The latest anecdote about the old lady who thinks that she "knows everything" is about how she went to a Church sociable, and, as she entered the room, the young ladies said: "Good evening, auntie, we are glad you came; we are going to have tableaux this evening." "Yes, I know, I know," was the reply, "I smelt 'em when I first came in."

"Oh, George, I'm so glad you've come. I want to ask you how you like the new frieze we have in our drawing-room." George who has not been received very cordially of late: "It'll do. I hope it won't prove to be the same old freeze. I don't like decorations in cold blood." "Well, I prefer declarations a little less frigid than yours, myself." Where there is so much coolness there is little hope.

In regard to dosing: "Hullo, Charlie! Where have you been?" "Just down to the apothecary's for a bottle of medicine for my wife. What things these women are for dosing, aren't they?" Charley's friend coincides with this view of the matter, and at Charley's suggestion the two step into the nearest saloon for something to brace up their respective stomachs.

How the Bonny Brides of Old were Attired.

Chatting a few evenings since with a charming old lady of eighty years, and seated close beside her in a chimney corner whose capacious fireplace was aglow with a hickory blaze such as few of this generation have been fortunate enough to witness and enjoy, the current of social gossip and reminiscence flowed into the domain of fashion. With a minuteness of detail which exhibited a remarkable power of memory, we were favored with a clearly defined description of the manners, customs and prevalent modes of dress of the days "when she was young and to the manner born," three-score years ago. Excusing herself a moment, she returned bearing upon her arm a silk dress, once white, but now limp and yellow by the touch of time. The dress deserves description. It was narrowly gored on the front and side breadths, and quite short. In the back there was a large cluster of deep gathers. The waist line was relegated almost to the armpits, and the very short bodice was cut out square in the neck and edged with wide, old-fashioned lace.

The waist was laced up the back with a flat cord. The sleeves were long and close, and finished with frills of lace at the wrists.

"This was my wedding dress," she said. "My father rode a distance of more than thirty miles on horseback to buy the silk of which it is made. Its cost represented my saving for more than four years in butter and cheese-making. I cut and made it with my own hands. My pattern was the bridal dress of our pastor's wife, who the year before had come to us a young bride from the shores of Massachusetts Bay." Holding up one of the sleeves, she said: "Here is a stain upon the silk. One of my bridesmaids, in adjusting my modest homemaid bridal veil, pricked her finger with an intrusive pin, and from the tiny wound fell a single drop of blood, of which this blemish is the sign and token. To me it was but a trifle, to her it was a grievous mishap which clouded her evening's happiness."—Ex.

Newspaper Publishing in Japan.

The newspapers in the kingdom are now reported at 113 (besides 133 miscellaneous publications), and the newspaper circulation is said to have grown from 8,470,269 in 1874 to 33,449,529 in 1877. A list of the dozen leading journals is given, which issues from 2,900 to 19,000 copies daily; one has 19,000 circulation, one has 13,000, one has 9,000, one has 6,000, one has 5,000, and the other seven has less than 4,000 each; but if 300 publication days in the year are assumed, the aggregate circulation of these twelve is nearly 29,000,000. The journal of largest circulation, partly illustrated, strikes the lowest level of sensationalism, and borders on looseness of morals; the restrictive press laws take no trouble about indecencies, but apply only to expressions as to Governmental affairs. The code of 1878 does provide for a fine of 5 to 10 yen (the yen is equivalent to our trade dollar) for publication of anything offending against good morals and decency, but these terms are rather vaguely defined in Japan.

WHITE OR BLACK.

What is the Proper Color for Summer Clothing?—The Opinion of Captain Mayne Reid.

Captain Mayne Reid writes to the London Daily News:—In a recent article, the writer, after stating that a certain lecturer had declared white to be the best color for clothing, and adding that Dr. Richardson has recommended grey on identical grounds, goes on to say for himself, "Men will continue to wear black—the coldest color in the winter and the hottest in summer." Now, the belief in black being the

WARMEST COLOR FOR CLOTHING,

and white the coolest, has, up to a late period, passed as an undisputed fact, which, if I mistake not, I was myself the first to challenge and pronounce erroneous—one of those lurking errors that from earliest times have escaped the detection of science. I did so in the Live Stock Journal, of date January 24, 1879; and as, in a hygienic point of view, the subject is one of no slight importance, perhaps you will allow me to repeat part of what I then and there said. The question came up in connection with some observation I had made on the snow-bleaching of certain birds and quadrupeds, wish reference also to queries thereon by the Banffshire naturalist, Edwards. My remarks were in substance as follows:—"Why do polar hares and foxes, that are slate-blue in summer, turn snow-white in winter? Nature effect the change; but with what object and for what purpose? The usual mode of accounting for it, when speaking of the hare, is that this defenceless creature by becoming white is assimilated to the color of the snow, and so escapes the danger of being sighted by predatory animals. But the fox also assumes a white dress precisely at the same period of time; and, as he is one of those predatory animals, his altered hue enables him the more easily to approach this very prey! So that were that the design of the transformation, we should have nature making a fool of herself, which nature never does.....I am acquainted with the usual test of color temperature; the two pieces of cloth, white and black, spread upon snow. When this proverbial problem comes to be more thoroughly investigated, it will go the way of the flat earth and the sperical bullet.....While campaigning in a tropical country, under the hottest of suns, I became aware that than a white one, both being of the same weight, texture, and thickness—in short, cæteris paribus, save the color. The fact led me to reflection, to correlation of other facts and circumstances observed at the same time, as on other occasions. For one, I could see that my negro servant alongside me, enveloped in a coal black skin, did not suffer from the fervid rays of the sun half so much as I under my tripe-colored epidermis. What could this be but a provision of nature—merciful nature—made for him whose home was to be in the torrid zone? And the longer I remained within its limits the more could I acknowledge her kindness in tauning my cheeks, and so making them less sensitive to the scorching sun. From the coat upon my back and the color of my skin thought wandered back to the black bears of tropical countries—always coal, black—to the brown species of temperate climes, and on to the Arctic ice, where Ursa is robed in white. Then, there is night and day, shadow and sunlight, the dark, naked ground, and the same covered with snow—all in their opposed temperatures in conformity with my belief as above." Some ten months later the Lancet, possibly inspired by what I had said in the Live Stock Journal, thus made allusion to the same subject; "We have more than once asked attention for the undoubted effect of color on the radiating power of clothing.....Certainly light-colored substances approaching to white do not part with their heat so readily as dark. The bear of the polar regions is for this reason provided with white fur, while her brother of warmer climates has a dark-colored integument. It therefore seems desirable to prefer bright to sombre hues, and if this choice were made the result would be an air of additional cheerfulness in the public streets.....The matter may seem of small moment, but the life we live is made up of small considerations and little affairs." Now this matter may not be of such small moment, but one having serious consequences in a sanitary sense, and so deserving further investigation.

"Valenciennes" Lace.

It is a fact not commonly known even among lace dealers that very little of the article known as Valenciennes is made in that far-famed locality. It is difficult work requires a long apprenticeship, absorbs all the maker's time, and is so inadequately remunerated that labor seeks other fields. As it takes several months, and sometimes even a year, to make a coupon three yards in length, and as it is impossible for the operative to remain so long a time without compensation, it is customary to pay by bandes, there being three bandes in a yard, and twelve in a coupon—the result of this being that the material is furnished and almost the whole amount due the maker paid out a long time before the completion of the work. What is known as Valenciennes lace is, in fact, made extensively at Ypres, Courtray, Ghent, Bruges, and in almost all parts of Flanders; and in the production of one coupon of the fabric rarely less than 400 spindles and 1,500 pins are employed.

A splendid specimen of a royal sturgeon was forwarded from Edinburgh to the Prince of Wales as a present on the opening of the Fisheries Exhibition. It was a tremendous sample of its class, caught in the Tay. It measured no less than seven feet four inches in length and weighed exactly 150 pounds. Its escort was composed of twelve New Haven fishwives. The quaint and highly colored costumes of these fishwives and their melodious "caller on" are familiar to every one who has visited the Scottish metropolis.

"Do Likewise."

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:—"Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' In three months I was perfectly cured. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them and inclosing stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks stating that they had commenced the treatment and were much better already.

A Certain Remedy for Corns.

This is the universal testimony and expressed by everyone who has used PUTNAM'S CORN EXTRACTOR. Thousands in Canada have used it with gratifying results, and it you will take the trouble to ask any druggist he will give you the names of many persons of your acquaintance who have been radically cured of the worst kind of corns. Sold everywhere. Safe, sure, painless, and vegetable in composition. Try it. It never fails. Take no substitute. Many of them are positively dangerous. Use Putnam's Corn Extractor.

Diphtheria—that terrible scourge of the present day—attacks chiefly those whose vitality is low and blood impure. The timely use of Burdock Blood Bitters forestalls the evils of impure blood, and saves doctor's bills. Sample bottles 10 cents. (30)

"Proud of it?" he said. "Of course I am. He stopped four days at my house and was taken with the delirium tremens. Shows I'm a good entertainer, doesn't it?"

Never Allow It.

Never allow the bowels to remain in a torpid condition, as it leads to serious results, and ill health is sure to follow. Burdock Blood Bitters is the most perfect regulator of the bowels, and the best blood purifier known. (29)

"Now, then, witness," said the cross-examining counsel sternly, "does the preceding witness enjoy your entire confidence?" "Great Scott, no! Why, that's my wife."

Highly Satisfactory.

Impure blood and low vitality are the great sources of most diseases for which Burdock Blood Bitters is the specific. S. Perrin, Druggist, of Lindsay, writes that Burdock Blood Bitters give more general satisfaction than any blood purifier in the market. (25)

QUERY?

The question is often asked: Can [illegible] charged with electricity? And if [illegible] they retain it?

We find by experience that all [illegible] all minerals, gums and vegetable [illegible] in their crude state, are capable of [illegible] and retaining electricity. We also [illegible] any electric in its crude state, such [illegible] when held in solution by chemical [illegible] means. As for example, steel, one [illegible] strongest electrics when held in [illegible] chemical means, is capable of being [illegible] charged and containing electricity, [illegible] are all other electrics to some extent. [illegible] also find that rock sand and glass, [illegible] ing no minerals, are not electrics. [illegible] also that pure animal grease is not [illegible] of being charged to any extent with [illegible] tricity; but all mineral gums and [illegible] oils, we believe, are capable of being [illegible] with and retaining electricity to a [illegible] less extent. Bones, blood, muscle, [illegible] sinews are not composed of rock [illegible] glass, but of mineral and vegetable [illegible] stances, mysteriously combined, [illegible] them capable of being acted upon by [illegible] tricity. The system of man, as with [illegible] ed nature, is capable of receiving and [illegible] ing electricity. It is a part of our [illegible] without which we could not exist. [illegible] Electric Oil contains no animal grease, [illegible] sand or glass, and is highly charged [illegible] electricity, hence its great success in [illegible] treatment of diseases such as rheumatism, [illegible] neuralgia and nervous diseases. It [illegible] lates to action the weak or dormant [illegible] of our beings. It assists nature to throw [illegible] disease. The want of proper action of [illegible] liver and kidneys is the cause of more [illegible] tality than all other causes combined. [illegible] tricity strengthens and tones the liver, [illegible] kidneys. It acts directly on the [illegible] and urinary organs, destroying or [illegible] acting the effect of the overflow of [illegible] poisons from the vital organs above, [illegible] which is dispersed through the system [illegible] the medium of the life fluid, the blood.

The Incas.

Perhaps some of the most remarkable of ancient dwelling-places are the ruined homes of the Incas, still scattered about on the great continent which, by a strange misuse of terms, we called the New World. In these vestiges of palaces and large cities, on the worn stones of grand and massive monuments, lies the undeciphered history of that motly empire, in which fragments of surrounding races conquered by the Incas were mixed up in a high degree; for, before the waves of Spanish invasion surged over Peru, there was no pages of history to turn back for a faithful picture of the national life; no possibility of tracing the successive steps which led the Incas from their early seat of civilization to the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

Tradition says that the first homes of the Incas are to be found on the shores and islands of the sacred lake, Titicaca; and among the ruins there many objects of interest in gold and silver and pottery have been discovered. Some of the few rare specimens of pottery present fair representations of the people of those far-off times, which show that they were identical in feature with their descendants of the present day. But at the period when this race of kings are first met with in history, their empire extend for two thousand five hundred miles, and included the present States of Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and part of Chili. It was traversed by the two great mountain ranges of the Cordilleras. A great portion of this vast kingdom was particularly uninhabitable.

On the plateu of the Despoblado, which lies far above the limits of eternal snow, betweea the mountain ranges there is no trace of human habitation, excepting small huts of refuge built by the Incas on the main road between the northern and southern parts of their dominions. And in the desolate regions around the Lake Umayo, the only distinguishing features are the innumerable chulpas or burying towers, which stand singly or in groups upon the desert plain. Round or square, these tombs are solid structures, with one cavity at the base, entered by a narrow hole in the side. Some are in ruins; a few as perfect as when first completed; many, doubtless, as completely vanished as the ashes they were meant to cover.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

York is the most ancient Metropolitan See in England. It was made a bishopric by King Lucius, about 180.

Until 1835 the punishment for sacrilege in England was death. At that date it was changed to transportation for life.

Louis the Fat was the first king who took the oriflamme into battle. The banner belonged to the Abbey of St. Denis, and was suspended over his tomb.

The "Radicals" became prominent in England in 1816, when Hampden clubs were formed, of which Sir Francis Burdett, Lord Cochrane and William Cobbet were members.

It is said that the first Masters in Chancery were appointed to assist the ignorance of Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Councillor of England, in 1587. The office was abolished in 1852.

The surrender of Abd-el-Kader to the French took place Dec. 22, 1847. He was imprisoned at Pau and at Amboise, although the French had promised to give him his liberty, but Louis Napoleon released him in 1852.

In 1773 Elizabeth Timothy published and edited a paper in Charleston, S. C. After the revolution Anne Timothy became its editor, and was appointed State Printer, which position she held seventeen years. Mary Crouch published a paper in Charleston about the same time, in special opposition to the stamp act. She afterwards removed her paper to Salem, Mass., and continued its publication there for three years after.

Perhaps the oldest tunnel in the Alps in existence is the heading driven by the orders of Margrave Louis II. of Saluzzo through Mount Viso, and constructed in the years 1472 to 1480. It was completed at a total cost, including the paths leading to the respective openings, of 12,000 florins. The tunnel has a height of 6½ feet and an average width of 8 feet, and at the present time a length of only about 250 feet. It is stated, however, that, in consequence of frequent land slips, the openings of the tunnel have gradually receded, and that it may have had when first opened double its present length. The geological structure of Mont Viso is similar to that of Mont Cenis, and frequent irruptions rendered repeated repairs necessary. During times of war the tuonel has been blocked and walled up; but Napoleon I. gave orders for its complete restoration.

A customs office has been opened at the Portage.

Work has been commenced at Nelson on the county buildings.

The residents of Pilot Mound are seeking incorporation as a town.

The railway station at Stony Mountain has been burned down.

The C. P. R. is furnishing a large stock yard at Portage la Prairie.

The ninth Provincial Exhibition of the Province of Manitoba will be held in the Portage from the 1st to the 6th of October.

The employees along the main line of the C. P. R. have been notified that their wages will be reduced from the first of this month.

A citizen of Brandon, going to the river for a pail of water recently, found the body of an infant floating on the water near the bank.

Brandon has voted a bonus of $5,000 and exempt from taxation to a paper mill. In addition the company receives a grant of a block of land from private individuals.

Mr. Baker, formerly of the C. P. R. staff, and at one time private secretary to Lord Dufferin, has been appointed General Manager of the Portage, Westbourne & Northwestern Railway.

Two car-loads of potatoes, were recently seized for undervaluation by the Customs authorities at Emerson. The firm was fined $100 and afterwards allowed to buy the potatoes back.

Messrs. Grigg & McGregor are building a saw mill at Brandon. It will have a capacity of 10,000 feet a day to start with, afterwards to be increased as the necessities of the business demand.

The body of the man Alexander Robertson missing since September last, has been found imbedded in the mud of Morris river, near the residence of Mr. Lane, where it has probably lain ever since the day of his disappearance.

The engineer of the Qu'Appelle & Wood Mountain Railway has completed the preliminary survey of the route between Qu'Appelle and Fort Qu'Apelle. He reports the entrance to the valley easy, good alignments, and grades no heavier than on the C. P. R.

A Winnipeg despatch says that trouble is reported at the end of the track by strikes of railway employees. The Indians are also troublesome, and several horses have been stolen. Inspector Steele has left Regina with thirty Mounted Police for the scene of the troubles.

The M. & N. W. Survey party consisting of twelve men, have been running a line across the river at Minnedosa. The line runs through the Registry Office and through German & Gilles' store, crosses the river in front of the Brunswick Hotel, and is fifty feet up the hill to the west, as it passes Odanah.

The Ridiculously Solemn Mexican Dance.

I entered at 10 p.m., a hall in a large old house in a town in Mexico and took a seat on one of the many chairs that were ranged round the room with their backs to the wall. The hall was spacious, and few people had yet arrived. In one corner of the hall sat a man before a small round table, on which were placed small plates full of almonds and raisins. Some ladies were seated at the other end of the room, attentively watching this man and the entrance door by turns. Their curiosity was soon relieved, for one by one the crowd poured in, and each one took his or her seat on one of the chairs against the wall. The aspect of the whole thing was ridiculously solemn. Suddenly one young man, less bashful than the rest, walked up to one of the almond and raisin-watching ladies and began to dance with her. Others followed his example, and to the slowest timed waltz I ever have seen, gloomily moved here and there through the room. They had come there for pleasure, I for business; but what pleasure these young men and girls found in moving about the room so slowly and sedately I shall, I fear, never be able to find out. As each cavalier led his partner to her seat he would look at the almond and raisin President and very gravely nod.; then, his "bien aimee" being seated, he would purchase a plateful of these delicacies and always in the same grave manner present them to her. She would place them in her pocket-handkerchief and wait for the next beau. As far as I could make out, the game seemed to be who would get the most almonds and raisins, and I shrewdly suspect that the fruits were returned to the President, and each plateful represented a certain amount of money for the danseuse.—Galveston News.

Doing Him a Favor.

The occupant of an office on Larned street desired to drop 5,000 circulars to as many residents of Detroit regarding a new household patent, and he had just completed the weary work of directing the envelopes, the other day, when in came a telegram calling him out of the city for a day or two. He ran into a law office and left his key and explained that he was sorry he didn't have time to mail his circulars before going. When he had departed the lawyer said to his office boy:

"My son, what is life worth without the good opinion of our fellow-men?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Of course not. This afternoon you go over and stamp all his circulars and get them into the postoffice. It will be a favor and a surprise to him."

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the boy said he had used up all the stamps, and he was directed to mail the circulars and wait for his reward. It came in a manner to astonish him. When the circular man returned he rushed into the law office white with rage, drove the boy into a corner, and shrieked out at the top of his voice;

"You infernal idiot! You licked three cents on each circular!"—Detroit Free Press.

Gas is more out of favor than ever in sitting rooms in England. The French moderator lamp, burning colza (rape seed) oil, is the favorite light.

Traits of Russian Character.

One can understand as one reads "Underground Russia," how a sect like the Skoptzi, or self-mutilators, has grown to a large community, how Russians have been found to die on the gallows for the right to spell "Jesus" with two j's; how there once arose in the South a sect with suicide for creed, which actually alarmed the authorities by the increase it made in local mortality. The Russian, as portrayed here, has two instinctive specialties. The relation between thought and action is in him terribly close, so close that thought is usually immature, and when a thought has possession of him, self is totally suppressed. These Nihilists, for example, have forgotten God—all educated Russians, says Stepniak, are Materialists, and certainly all Nihilists are—have accepted as their dominant idea or faith that to bring happiness or even endurable existence to the Russian millions, the existing method of government must be swept totally away. Murder—plain murder, and not only the assassination of kings—becomes for them only an act, and, being required by their belief, is acted. The right of arson is not one they discuss even in thought, they assume it; and though we see no plain reference to it, we do not doubt, from the facts at Odessa and Kief, that Stepniak, if money needful for the cause were wanting, would admit that he approved theft or forgery to obtain it, at least if the victim were a department of the state. Even this state of mind is not without examples. We do not suppose that Philip II. of Spain, with Catholicism at stake, would have hesitated at murder, or fire-raising, or forgery, and, in fact, he did not hesitate at the two first. But here comes in the strange peculiarity of the case. These Nihilists are not in the least like Philip II. They are men who possess in a degree almost unparalleled that power of self-abnegation, of suppressing the carnal man, as Christian doctors say, which seems to many men, not unreasonably, the perfection of virtue. They are murderers who go to the gallows smiling and gentle; fire-raisers who would jump into the blazing houses, if that would help; thieves who would regard the abstraction of a copper coin from the stolen money for their own indulgence as a disgraceful crime. All of them hold the doctrine of free love, most of them find female companions essential to their plans, but many of them, if not all, in order to devote themselves more exclusively to their work treat them as their sisters.

Japanese Tea.

Japanese tea as exported, which ten years ago rose to such favor, especially in this country, is falling very low. It was at first choice in quality, and the quantity produced was relatively small; but the great demand for it induced the growers to abandon their ancient custom of picking only the young spring leaves. They soon took to stripping the plants all through the season, and even to adding wisteria leaves. Formerly the long and wiry tea leaf had a natural olive tint, and an especially delicate flavor; but now the leaves are broken short, while their dusky brown or yellow shades are disguised with ultramarine or indigo blues, gypsum, or soapstone; and the twenty-seven tea-firing houses in Yokohama where these sophistications take place appear, from the report of Drs. Geerts and Wheeler, to be filthy, crowded, unhealthy dens. Strenuous efforts are, however, being made to better this condition of affairs. It is curious to find also that the rich, fragrant Oolong teas of Formosa, which sprang into such sudden repute, are falling off in quality.

The Population of the Air.

Ancient Pantheism animated all nature. Gnomes in caverns, naiads in springs, sylphs in the air, represented life, pervading everything. Twenty centuries having passed, science has resuscitated these elementary genii under the form of organic germs; and we are forced to-day to recognize that the reality surpasses all the bold conceptions of the fable. From pole to pole the atmosphere transports myriads of microscopic animals and plants. They are counted by hundreds in each cubic metre of air that we breath in Paris. Developing themselves in the organic infusions into which they fall, they soon determine then complete decomposition; and they play their parts in virulent diseases and in fermentations. No doubt is permissible on this point after the admirable labors of M. Pasteur; and every day a new workman brings his stone as a contribution to the grand edifice of which this illustrious physiologist has drafted the plan and himself laid the impregnable foundations.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Very Sensitive Plant.

A singular species of acacia is growing at Virginia, Nev., which shows all the characteristics of a sensitive plant. It is about eight feet high and growing rapidly. When the sun sets its leaves fold together, and the ends of the twigs coil up like a pigtail, and if the latter are handled there is evident uneasiness throughout the plant. Its highest state of agitation was reached when the tree was removed from the pot in which it was matured, into a larger one. To use a gardener's expression, it went very mad. It had scarcely been placed in its new quarters before the leaves began to stand up in all directions, like the hair on the tail of an angry cat, and soon the whole plant was in a quiver. At the same time it gave out a most pungent odor, resembling that of rattlesnakes when teased. The smell so filled the house that it was necessary to open the doors and windows, and it was a full hour before the plant calmed down and folded its leaves in peace.

Why He Married the Bachelor.

A postman left two letters at the residence of a Chicago minister, both of which contained an application for his services to perform the marriage ceremony at the same time.

"I hardly know what to do," he remarked to his wife. "I can't accommodate them both. Let me see—Mr. A. has been married before, has he not?"

"Oh, yes," replied his wife, "he lost his first wife six months ago."

"And B. is a bachelor?"

"Yes."

"That settles it, then. I shall marry Mr. B. When a man marries a second time he never pays the minister any more than the law allows, but young bachelors are sometimes very foolish," and the good man rubbed his hands mildly.

A SLIGHT OF A CYCLONE.

Some Curious and Unaccountable Freaks of the Wind.

A correspondent at Hillsboro, Montgomery county, Ill., writes of a recent great storm: It was my fortune to witness, at a distance of about three hundred yards, the cyclone pass through the outskirts of our city. I have also investigated part of its track since. During the evening previous to the storm (which occurred between 9 and 10 o'clock p. m.,) the whole sky was laden with black, heavy clouds, and the entire horizon was constantly illuminated by flashes of lightning. The wind was strong, but variable, and seemed to change rapidly from one storm centre to another. But little rain had fallen previous to the passage of the cyclone, yet for an hour before its appearance the heavens looked like heavy storms prevailing in almost every direction. When I first saw the cyclone, I now judge it must have been from three to five miles distant, and seemed to be approaching the spot where I stood. I got several clear and distinct view of its outline by the incessant flashes of lightning which illuminated the heavens. When first seen it was a dense, black cloud, not extending over ten degrees horizontally, from which depended a funnel-shaped cloud, point downward. The funnel seemed to rise and lower, so low at times that the point or stem was hardly seen, at others rising; the stem, meanwhile, seemed to writhe and whirl like a gigantic snake suspended by the tail.

It came from a point almost due south-west, and while its path in some places is a zigzag its main direction was a direct line nearly northeast. The fact that its path through this vicinity is exactly in line with those of the cyclones which passed near Staunton in Macoupin county and through Nokomis in this county on the same evening leads to the conclusion that these storms were one and the same. If this conclusion is correct it jumped or left untouched a distance of about fifteen miles between its last appearance in Macoupin county and the point where it first touched the ground in this county, and making another jump about three miles northeast of this place, again striking the earth at Nokomis, about ten miles distant, where it made several successive dips for a distance of two or three miles, destroying two dwelling-houses and several barns, then disappearing entirely. As it swept past this town it travelled with great rapidity. Its speed must have been fully, if not more than,

FORTY MILES AN HOUR.

It was accompanied by a deafening roar, more like the din one hears at the Main street crossing of the St. Louis bridge during the passage of heavy freight trains than anything else I can conceive of. During its passage, at the distance of one-fourth of a mile on each side of its track, there was a tremendous suction or side draft of wind toward it and blowing in a direction at right angles with its path.

The width of its path varies with the nearness of its approaches to the ground. In some place it is thirty rods wide, in others not more than ten rods. The pendent stem, or small end of the funnel, is always the centre of the track and the force of the storm. Where it swept along the ground can easily be seen. The track of the stem proper is not more than four or five feet wide. There is nothing more certain than that there is absolutely no safety for anything in the track of the stem. It will take the water out of wells and in many places actually dig trenches in the solid earth. There is no safety in cellars or caves in its immediate track, but a cellar or cave would be a safe place if only ten or fifteen feet on either side of the stem. No house in this county was struck by the central stem, consequently the loss of life was not so great as it otherwise would have been. The nearest approach was at Mr. Blackburn's residence, about three miles southwest of this city, where the storm passed about fifteen feet from the southeast corner of the building, and within ten feet of a well. A bucket in the well was taken out and has not been heard of since. The dwelling was two stories, with a one-story L on south side, next to the storm. It was a substantial brick, with very thick walls. The L was entirely demolished and the main building down to the second floor. The window-sash and outer and inner door shutters of the lower story were taken out bodily, and the furniture and clothing of the family carried away. The outside of the east wall of the house left standing was plastered with a mixture of mud and sand as neatly as if it had been put on with a paint brush. A number of stones of a peculiar formation and shape uncommon in this region were showered upon a farm near its track. Small straws were driven end foremost into solid wood and through the bark of trees a quarter of an inch thick. Growing wheat was twisted off and taken up by the roots and deposited again along the track in small bunches or wads, having the appearance of having been chewed by a beast and spit out. The leaves of trees near its track on each side have the appearance of having been scorched or partly burned. Farmers living ten miles north of this place found next morning after the storm that they had been visited during the night by a shower of broken boards, shingles, leaves and twigs of trees and bits of clothing. Much of the former showed from the form and paint still adhering that they were pieces of door and window frames and house and barn weather boarding. The storm revolved from right to left. The workmen engaged here in removing the debris of the iron railroad bridge which was thrown a shapeless mass into the bed of the stream by the cyclone affirm that the quality of the iron has been ruined by the cause. If by the cyclone then there is another knot for the scientists to untie.

LORD LANSDOWNE.

MOVEMENTS OF OUR NEXT GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The London World of May 30, says : The Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne are staying at Bewood, and will come to town a short time this season. Lord Lansdowne took a week to decide whether he would accept the Government of Canada. His family and friends all advised him to do so, It is no secret that his income has been most seriously diminished by the antirent agitation in Ireland, as his vast estates in Kerry are the backbone of the family possessions. He owns 125,000 acres in Ireland, and only 11,000 in England. Lord Lansdowne was in town for two days last week, and had interviews with Mr. Gladstone, Lord Grenville, and Lord Derby.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Mr. Doll has found his valise which was reported to have been stolen out of a car at Union Station Toronto, and now the question is asked, "did he ever loose it."

We are glad to see Mrs. Cæsor, so far recovered as to be out again.

T. W. Potter, son of the late Rev. R. Potter gave us a call on Monday. He is on a visit from Texas, where he is following the sheep stock business with success, he left on Wednesday for that place.

Miss Hearst of Tara has been visiting in this place this week.

Jim Shea of Priceville, had a watch stolen from him on the night of the 24th May, it appears the rooms were all crowded at the Revere House where he was stopping, so that a number had to sleep in the parlor where the watch was taken while he slept. Jack Hops was arraigned before J. W. Armstrong J. P., Flesherton, charged with stealing the watch, and was committed to Owen Sound Jail to await his trial.

Rev. Mr. Ward purposes taking a three month leave when he will take a trip to England. The Bishop of the Diocese has licensed Mr. F. Davis of London to attend to his work during his absence.

A confirmation service will be held at St. Mary's Church Maxwell on Sunday the 24th inst., at 11 o'clock and at Markdale the same evening at seven. The Lord Bishop of Toronto will officiate.

Mr. G. S. Brown has purchased from Mrs. Atkinson ten village lots in the rear of the STANDARD office.

Rev. Mr. Corcoran and Mr. D. R. Ellis returned from the Primitive Methodist Conference.

W. J. Benson returned from Manitoulin yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Clark, of Holland Tp., returned yesterday (Wednesday) from Michigan, where they have been visiting friends.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

One of the citizens of Markdale when out fishing lately in this section thought he was in for a splendid day's sport he got or felt something nibbling as is the custom with trout sometimes when they are a little shy, then he got a splendid bite and jerked to secure the speckled prize, speckled no, but striped, the rod broke off, but Tom equal to the occasion secured the line and hauled the beauty ashore when lo ! a garter snake about four feet long. Wonder if Tom ever indulges in profane language, it he don t he can pass.

Crops looking fully better than they are near Toronto.

Council resumed

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

The council declined taking any action in reference to the forming of a School Section which was petitioned for by certain ratepayers as this is not the proper session of the year for such actions.

The requisition of Rev. T. Rennie and others in reference to the improvement of 27 & 28 side roads in the 11th & 12th concessions entertained and Mr. Boyd and Mr. Paterson, appointed a committee, to examine said roads, and report at next meeting of Council.

A petition asking for improvement on 9 & 10 side line in the 7th & 8th concessions laid over for further consideration.

The amount of $60 was granted to be expended on the 11th line at lot 15.

The Reeve, Clerk and Mr. Paterson were appointed to examine the assessment roll.

Mr. Jordan's time for returning his roll was extended until the 18th inst., on account of his recent illness.

The petition of Wm. Paterson, and others laid before Council asking improvement, on Southerly end of 3rd line, and the Reeve and Mr. Ellis appointed to investigate this matter, and also to examine the blind line between the 3rd & 4th concession at lot 2, and report at next meeting of council.

The Treasurer was ordered to remit to Mr. Rutledge, printer Markdale, $38, for printing up to date.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer as follows, viz. ;—

SANITARIUM.

The present season has set in with sunshine and showers, and sultry heat, which health departments say are conducive to human ailments. The food we eat is an important factor in the preservation of health. Our sanitary laws are efficient for incorporated towns and cities. Most people think that in the country all is pure and healthy ; so it is, as far as the gifts of God are concerned, where wicked humanity has not the power to adulterate. Some years ago a rigid investigation was made by the sanitary commission of New York as to the quality of the milk supplied to the public of that city, and a cemical analysis proved that out of hsome seven hundred samples tested, only five were found pure, New York has its counterpart—even worse than the swill-milk of that notorious city— in your little town of Markdale. A fashionable hotel in your village, where the most fastidious of your clerks and traveling public resort, have a cow to supply the table with milk. The poor animal has contracted disease, and has a running sore in the jaw—a monster ulcer—the size of a pail yet the milk from this diseased animal is supplied to the boarders and guests, thus feeding a putrid substance which cannot fail to bring about fatal results, but we are told the cautious landlady purchases her milk for personal use, from a neighbor.

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife ; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

STRUCK BY LIGETNING.—On Tuesday the 5th, the lightning struck a stump a few roods from Mr. Hugh Smith's house, Euphrasia, shattering the stump, throwing pieces over 50 yards, and tearing up the ground, it also killed a pig the same time and place.

Yesterday, between the station and the village, on the way from the noon train, a man was smoking in the Revere buss, when a spark from his pipe lit in the clothes of a young lady in the same rig, setting fire to her parasol, a parcel and her clothes. Had it not been discovered in good time and extinguished, the damage might have proved serious.

ATTEMPT AT INCENDIARISM.—On Wednesday a dastardly attempt was made to fire the building occupied by G. W. Parsons. Mr. Parsons had been out, and returned about 11 o'clock, heard some noise in the shed. Proceeding to ascertain the cause, a quantity of paper thoroughly saturated with coal oil and some pine wood split finely, was found lying in the shed near several barrels of oil. Several burnt matches were found near. Had it not been discovered it is altogether likely the building, if not the contents would have been destroyed as the wind was blowing in the direction of the main building.—Dundalk Herald.

SAW MILL BURNT.—On Sunday last Colin Blyth's saw mill on the 3rd, con., Normanby was totally destroyed by fire. The direct loss will be about $1,000 for which there is no insurance. The men were all away from home at the time with the exception of Mr. Blyth himself, so nothing could be done to save the building. A great number of logs for the seasons sawing was in the yard so a serious loss will result from work being suspended. The fire is supposed so have originated from sparks carried from a smouldering heap of saw dust. Several men will be thrown out of employment, their occupation being gone there for a while.—Chronicle.

A Gorgia paper tells of a man down there who sneezed so hard he broke his back. This recalls the fact (alleged) that a large mouthed man in Kansas, a short time since, dislocated his hip joint by yawning. There is a man in Williamsport who is so round-shouldered that he has to use sticking plaster to hold his shirt on. The champion thin man lives in Wyandote. Every time he shaves his face he nicks the razor. An old chap living on Bland street has such a long nose that he has to take snuff in April in order to sneeze in July. The midget at a New York museum has such a small mouth that his mother kisses him through a pipe-stem.

COMMITTED.—Since January, there have been some six or seven cases of abstraction of letters at Hepworth Post Office, or going to or from it, and Inspector Spry has been at work trying to find out the culprit. The Post Master has been charged, the clerks on the trains have been charged, but still the thefts continued; until a few days ago, when a letter containing $100 was sent by the Postmaster himself addressed to Montreal. It disappeared between the Post Office and railway station and suspicion at once fell on a youn, man named Thos Burr, who carries the mail from the post office to the station. The Inspector had him arrested and brought before Justice Price and Rutherford in Owen Sound this morning, and sufficent evidence being given, he was committed for trial at the general Session.—O. S. Times.

MILLET.—A farmer who has long grown the ordinary millet, and having a large dairy of over 50 cows, says it is the best fodder of all he has tried, (sorghum, amber cane, or sweet-corn, etc.), for making milk, whether cut green or soiling, or when first coming into bloom for hay. He gets two or three tons per acre, and will sow twenty acres this year. I have tried it repeatedly on my poor soil here, but never got a good crop—probably isbecause not manured enough. Millet cultivated like Hungarian grass. June is early enough to sow the millet, as it matures in six to eight weeks. In latitude of 40o, sow early in May, and again every two weeks through June, and thus get a succession of crops from July 1st through August.—A.B. in American Agriculturist for June.

Osprey.

From a correspondent.

If there is one thing more interesting than another in this township at the present time it is the Railway question. Though our neighbors who are better supplied with railway accomodation think we are not suffering any great inconvenience, we cannot look on it in any other light than that the extension of the Credit Valley Railway from Orangeville through Osprey, would be the commencement of a new era in the history of this township.

There is a vast amount of timber, valuless as it is, which would bring thousands of dollars, and give employment to hundreds in the winter season who, as it is, spend the long winter consuming what they make during the summer.

We understand the Credit Valley company are considering the matter, and favorable hopes are entertained that the extension will yet be made at an early date. We assure you any information you can give through the STANDARD from time to time will be read with interest by your many Osprey subscribers.

A LUCKY MISTAKE.

"Tom," said my father to me, one cold November afternoon, as we stood in the flagpaved hall of our old-fashioned farm-house, "you'd better put the little bay mare in the dog-cart and go into Worthington for that saddle. I clean forgot to call for it yesterday, and as I want you to go out with the hounds on Saturday, you won't have another chance of getting it."

Thus said my stalwart, weather-reddened, gray-haired old sire, as he put on his rough hat and took his thick walking-stick from the stand preparatory to going about the farm. It was about 3 o'clock, and dinner was just over; for the time of which I speak was twenty years ago, and the farmer had not then learnt to live according to the laws of a fashion unsuited to his income and occupation, or to ape the style and expenditure of his landlord. My father was an old-fashioned yeoman, who tilled the land which his great-grandfather had tilled before him, and even had he lived in these days, when men of his type are rare, he would have kept to the old-fashioned ways.

I was nothing loth to act upon the parent's suggestion, although it meant a long drive in the biting cold, and although the return journey would have to be done in the dark, or with very indifferent moonlight. We were utterly isolated at the Mistletoe farm, for we were seven miles from Worthington, our nearest town, and ten miles in the opposite direction from the nearest railway station. My father farmed nearly five hundred acres, some of the land—especially that lying toward Worthington—being very poor stuff, and only fit for sheep. There was not even a village near, the laborers lived in cottages scattered over the estate, and in the depth of winter, when there was snow, or when the floods were out, we were often a week at a time and never saw a soul besides ourselves and our employés.

But we always had a good bit of horseflesh in the stable; as, indeed, was absolutely necessary, when our only means of communication with the outer world was the road, and when the distances were so great and the roads so bad. The little bay mare that I was going to drive—Fly-by-night was the name we afterwards gave her—was a young one of our own breeding, clever as a cat and docile as a dog. From her infancy she was my play-fellow; would come to me when I whistled to her, eat out of my hand or my pocket; and when the time came for backing her, there was nothing to be done. She had perfect confidence and trust in us all, and especially in me; the cat by the fireside could not be more gentle or more easy to control. If only people would learn that a horse can, by kind treatment and constant association, be made as tame and affectionate as a household pet, there would be fewer broken bones from back-jumpers and runaways.

She was a world too good for harness, I thought to myself, as I led her out of the stable and proceeded to put her to the old-fashioned, square dog-cart, which turned up behind, and looked like a mail-cart—barring the color, which was a dingy gray. The little mare was my hunter when the hounds were within reach and my father would let me go; and she carried me as gamely, even after twenty miles of harness the day before as if she was one of the squire's cracks, and went out only once a week.

As we trotted quietly down the drive, my father put his head over the hedge and called to me:

"Maybe the saddle won't be finished," he said, his red face glowing with the cold, his eyes glancing critically at the mare. "If so, you can put up at the Angel and have your tea; but don't be later than you can help. Have you got your watch on you?"

"Yes," I said, wondering at the question.

"You'd better give it to me," said my father, stretching his arm over the hedge. "I heard yesterday, at the ordinary, there was a gentleman stopped Monday night on the road. You haven't got too much money on you, I suppose?"

"No danger," said I with a laugh, as I put my watch and chain into my father's big, brown hand. "They won't get much out of me if they try it on."

And off we went, turned into a high road, and sped at a quick trot through the gathering twilight in the direction of Worthington.

It was dark when we reached the outskirts of the little town, and the lights, not very brilliant if tried by modern standards, sparkled cheerfully enough in the windows. Past the blacksmith's forge, with the great bellows roaring and the sparks flying from the glowing cinders; past the butcher's, with a goodly display of our best beef; past the grocer's, where the half-dozen children, who were flattening their noses against the panes turned to look at us, and so, clattering over the uneven cobbles of the pavement, to the saddler's shop. The proprietor himself, a staid and portly person, conscious of the importance which attaches to his position in a country town, came out and nodded a greeting.

"A cold night, Mr. Tom," says he, with a shiver, as the wind took his apron. "I'm not quite ready for you. Your father didn't come in yesterday, so I thought you would not want the saddle till next week."

"I want it for Saturday," said I, leaning sideways out of the trap. "The hounds are at the coppice, and the little mare and I are going. Can't you do it for me if I put up?"

The saddler thought for a moment.

"Ay, I can do that," he said at length. "Will you call in between 8 and 9 and it shall be ready for you."

I agreed, shook up the mare, and, a few yards further down, turned in through the narrow gateway of the Angel into the dim, deserted inn-yard. From a single, half-open doorway came a stream of light. A figure issued forth in answer to my summons.

"Good evening, Mr. Tom," said this person, approaching and patting the mare's neck.

"Hallo, Jack! is that you?" said I, as I drew the reins through my fingers and alighted, recognizing, as I did so, Mr. Jack Plover, to whom was intrusted the important duty of conveying the Queen's mail-bags from Worthington to the railway town. "You'll have to wrap up warm to-night."

"Ay! bitter cold, that it is," answered Jack, undoing the traces. "But law bless me! I'm used to it. If only I'd got as good a thing between my shafts as you have here, I'd think nothing of a seventeen-mile drive, I do assure you, sir."

"Your old pony isn't to be despised, either," said I, holding up the shaft while Jack drew the mare out. "A new pair of forelegs and sound bellows would improve him, but except for that——"

"Well, he isn't quite Newmarket or Doncaster, I do confess," said Jack, leading the mare in through the open doorway and putting her in a vacant stall. "But he's good enough for his work. I start early and we take it easy. You won't have the collar off, sir?"

"No," I said. "I am off again in an hour or so. Will you have a drink, Jack?"

We crossed the yard, passed through a swing door, and found ourselves in the warm cheerful bar, where the bright light made us wink after the darkness outside, and the huge fire sent a leaping, ruddy glare on the red curtains, and a reflection that danced merrily on the trim rows of bottles and glasses. The barmaid, buxom and fresh-colored, smiled a welcome, and rewarded my compliments on her pink ribbons and the roses in her cheeks by "Go along with you," and a couple of glasses of steaming whisky and water.

There was only one other occupant of the bar, a stranger to me. He was a man apparently verging on forty, buttoned up in a shabby great-coat, and with his hat slouched over his eyes so that his features were hard to be discerned. To the salutation which I gave him on entering, he made no reply, but with arms folded, gazed fixedly on the floor.

"My service, sir," says Jack, raising his tumbler to his lips and taking off the contents at a draught. "That's the stuff to keep the cold out. Although this is a bit too early. I ought to have waited until 8 o'clock, just before I started."

"You can have another then, if you like," said I, with a laugh.

"Nay, sir," remonstrated Jack. "I didn't mean that. Is the clock right miss?" he inquired of the barmaid. "Then I must be going about my work," he added, receiving an answer in the affirmative. "Good night, sir, and thank you kindly."

And Jack Plover, who was a sporting-looking figure with his queen's livery and clean-shaven face, touched his hat politely and passed through the swing door.

The man with the slouched hat looked up as he left, and, addressing nobody in particular, inquired in a harsh, rough voice, with a queer burr in it:

"What time does the post go out here?"

"At 8 o'clock," replied the barmaid, looking at her interrogator with no particular favor "That is the driver of the mail cart who has just left."

"So I judged," replied the man, rising, and putting some money on the table. "Is that right? Good-night to you."

And with a heavy, slouching gait, he strode to the door and was gone.

After tea in the half-lit coffee-room and a pipe in the bar, with the barmaid to tell me the gossip, I started at about half-past 8, called at the saddler's, put my saddle under the seat, and set out for home. As we passed the blacksmith's forge at the end of the street there was a pony being shod, and Mr. Jack Plover, in a big great-coat, was looking on at the process.

"Cast a shoe, Mr. Tom, and had to turn back," he called out as I passed by.

Out into the country, looking doubly black and dismal by contrast with the cheerful light and warmth that we were leaving behind; with the slanting rain driving full in one's face, so that it dazzled the sight; with gray piles of clouds hurrying overhead; with a veil of mist and darkness blending hurdle and hedge-row, field and tree into a vague, indistinct, gray mass. The road is muddy, and, albeit the high-road, in bad condition; but the little mare has got her head homeward, and pulls her hardest toward a warm stable and well-stocked rack and the society of heavy Dobbin and his brethren. Not that my little hunter is to be permitted to pull herself to pieces through ruts and over ill-laid stones, for there is Saturday in prospect, and, with the country in this state, we shall want the very last ounce. Now we are climbing a hill, and, anon, we are on the top, and the rain and the wind beat savagely upon us and the prospect on either hand is dreary enough. Now steadily down the shedding ground, with a tight rein and a careful lookout for loose stones; for this is deep descent, and one false step may take £20 off the little mare's value. The banks are high, at all events, so there is some shelter, and down at the bottom there are trees on either hand.

It was pitch dark in this hollow, but I let the mare out at the bottom of the hill and gave her her head. Suddenly, with a loud snort, she swerved violently, ran the wheel of the trap into a heap of wayside stones, put there to mend the road; and in a second we were over.

I went out, of course, and the driving-box, the saddle, and a debris of miscellaneous articles after me. I landed partly on my shoulder, partly on my head, and was up again in a moment, although a bit dazed. The moment I gained my feet I was seized by the collar, and a harsh voice exclaimed—not to me, but to someone else:

"Hold his head down—hold his head down!"

A dusky form sprang to the mare's head and kept her from attempting to rise. A third form knelt on the trap.

"By Jove!" exclaimed this last fellow in an angry tone, "we've got the wrong man!"

"What?" said he, who had hold of my collar. "Do you mean to say it isn't the——?"

With a volley of oaths, the other replied in the negative. The man who had hold of me released me and joined the other. They whispered together for a few seconds. Then the first one came back to me and said, with a fine pretense of indifference:

"Nasty accident, sir! But it might have been worse. It's lucky we were at hand to help you."

"I don't know about that," I replied, with no small acrimony, "for my horse shied at one of you. She never did it in her life before. You'll oblige me by helping to get her out."

In a twinkling we had the harness undone, and the mare, with a flounder and stagger, was on her feet, and shook herself in a disgusted fashion. The men said nothing, but obeyed my directions. Luckily nothing was broken; the mare had rubbed a little hair off her, as well as I could tell, but her knees were all right. In seven or eight minutes from the time we went over, so quickly did it all happen, I was in my seat again, ready to start.

My assailants, or assistants, whichever they were, made no opposition, and seemed only anxious to get rid of me; they dispatched me without a word, and I was a mile on my road before I fully realized what had happened. As is always the case in an accident, I could only recall what took place immediately before and immediately after, and for that very reason the words uttered by the men were more vividly impressed on my memory. What did they mean?"

It flashed into my mind like a revelation. They had been misled by the shape of my trap; which, as I said, was square behind, and looked like a mail-cart, while the darkness was too great in their place of ambuscade for them to see the color. The time of my arrival was about that of the mail, had not Jack Plover been obliged to turn back; and the careful pace at which I had come down the hill accorded very well with the steady movements of Jack's nag.

And the voice? I had heard it somewhere lately—the man in the Angel bar, who asked, too, the time when the mail left. There was no doubt of the men's purpose.

How to prevent it? How to warn Jack in time? There was no road back but the one by which I had come, unless I made a detour of several miles. Neither was there a house near, whence to get assistance. I pulled up and thought it out. A bruise on my right arm suggested something. I had fallen on my left side, and this bruise was caused by the saddle tumbling after me. I made up my mind at once.

Turning in through the first gate I came to, I drove over the turf to a corner of the field where there was a group of trees. Here I took the mare out; put the trap under the elms, and turned the cushions; took off all the harness but the bridle, and saddled her. Luckily the bridle had no blinkers. I wound the long reins round and round my arm, mounted, and, thanking Providence for my knowledge of the country, rode at the nearest fence. There was a faint moonlight to help us, but it was terribly dark. My heart was in my mouth as we went at the fence, which was a big upstanding one, but I knew there was no ditch on the taking-off side, and I gave the little mare the word at the right moment. She jumped clean from under me, and landed me on the crupper. I never shall forget that leap! If there had been anyone to see it I could have sold her almost for her weight in gold.

We were half way across the next field before I had regained my seat properly, and then the mad exhilaration of the thing took possession of the both of us. There was a flight of hurdles next which we took in our strides. Then a bank and a close cropped hedge that stood up, black as Erebus, against the gray of the night; which we jumped as though it were twice its height. Then a flock of frightened sheep went scurrying away into the darkness.

It was all turf, and, for the first time, I blessed the poverty of the land that made it worthless to plough. A dozen fences negotiated in the same mad fashion brought us into a field that skirted the road; and here we were pounded. There was a big bull-finch into the road, with a deep drop. To go on, parallel with the road was impossible, for there was a made-up bank with a cropped hedge, full of stakes, and a deep drain as I knew, ran on either side. I rode up and down by the bull-finch in despair. Was all my trouble to be in vain?

At last I made up my mind, and rode, not too fast, at the great, towering, straggling hedge. I put my arm across my face, shut my eyes, into it we went, and out of it, with a scramble and a flounder, we came—separately. The bull-finch merely brushed me out of the saddle, and the mare and I dropped side by side into the road, both of us on our legs. Before I had time to remount, I heard the sound of approaching wheels, and a man whistling merrily.

"Pull up, Jack!" I called out.

Jack's whistle ceased, and a more astonished countenance I never beheld than the one which looked down from the mail-cart.

In half an hour the constable and I were seated very uncomfortably on the back of the mail-cart, and driving along as fast as Jack's pony could be induced to go. Our only fear was lest the fellows should have got tired of waiting, for it was quite an hour and a half later than the time when the mail should have passed them. Down the hill we went, our hearts thumping away with excitement, not to mention the difficulty of holding on, and Jack performing "My Pretty Jane" with exquisite variations.

Well, to cut my story short, we got one of them. The constable, in his eagerness, jumped down directly the first man had seized the horse's head, and the other two fellows made off. We got the right gentleman, though—the identical fellow who had been in the Angel bar, and whose voice I had recognized. He was tried at the assizes, and, two other convictions being proved against him, was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

I went out with the hounds on Saturday, and my little mare was the heroine of the hour. The squire himself came up to me, and after complimenting us both on our achievement, said:

"What do you call her?"

"Well, squire," I repled, "we haven't given her a name yet."

"Call her Little Fly-by-night," said he.

And that's how she got her name.

Everybody wonders why the French should be so bent on annexing Tonquin. They are not born merchants, as the English are, and will never transform Tonquin into a trading centre. They will simply import and sell cheap perfumery, and photographs, cosmetics, and hair oil in fancy bottles. There is no reason why the French should go there. It is true that in Maunder's "Gazetteer" Tonquin is described as one of the finest countries in the East for population, fertility, and trade; but as regards the population the same authority tells us that, though they are dexterous, active, and ingenious, "they have more aptitude for imitation than invention." They live in houses built of mud, or "hurdles daubed over with clay." The country is 450 miles in length and 380 in breadth. The French possess the neighboring colony of Saigon, which cannot be considered an important commercial emporium. Most Orientals are born merchants; they are always bartering and bargaining. It needs, therefore, people akin to the nation of shopkeepers to compete with them. After the Americans and British the Germans follow by a long distance and at a still longer one the French.

The Present Condition of Egypt.

Mr. Villiers Stuart, a member of the British House of Commons, was some time ago appointed by the Home Government to make a thorough and exhaustive inquiry into the social and political condition of Egypt. His report has recently been presented, by command of the Queen, to both Houses of Parliament. A careful perusal of the report enables one to judge more fully of the importance of the task which Mr. Stuart undertook and carried out so well. Having been a frequent visitor to Egypt and being an accomplished student of the history and literature of that ancient and interesting country, Mr. Stuart was well qualified to perform the duties which he assumed during his late tour of inspection through the Delta of the Nile and Upper Egypt. As already stated, he visited all the provinces of the Delta, from December, 1882, until March last, and examined 44 witnesses and groups of witnesses in 26 different villages and communes. He then returned to Upper Egypt, where he held 35 separate inquiries, and examined a great number of persons of all classes. His observations show that he has obtained a clear insight into the social condition of the people. The provincial inhabitants of the Delta, he informs us without hesitation, are favorable to the English, and are prepared to welcome reforms at their hands. That such reforms are urgently needed is manifest from facts which show how corrupt, venal, and oppressive is the system of local administration. The people wished success to Arabi, because he had promised to cancel the village debts, and to banish the usurers. The latter are bringing in their train all the desolating effects of the plagues of old. The agricultural condition of the people contrasts favorably with that of the English farmer. If they had not their "gombeen men" to fleece them, they ought to be prosperous and contented. Cotton can be grown anywhere in the Delta, and is worth from £15 to £20 an acre, and the aftercrop of wheat, worth £5, can be grown in the same ground. In the following season the land would be cropped with green crops, eaten off by sheep and other live stock; then by the maize or dourra, and then by wheat, the three crops within the year being worth from £12 to £14. Beans, lentils, and other leguminous crops are also grown. On an average the crops of the fellah are worth £16 a year, while the English farmer's best crop of wheat is only worth £12. The fellah's land tax, which is, in fact, his rent, is not more than £1 13s. an acre, while the English farmer's is from £2 to £2 10s., and he has very heavy taxes to pay besides. Irrigation is carried on from the Nile by waterwheels or steam power. A 10 horse power steam engine suffices for 100 acres for the season, and the farmers club together for one when they cannot afford to have one for a single farm. They hire them out also to their neighbors at from 10s. to £1 an acre for each watering. If they were not burdened with local debts they would improve their lands still more. They are paying a ruinous rate of interest, from 42 to 63 per cent. per annum, and even as exorbitant as from 100 to 120 per cent. per annum. It is suggested that the Government should make advances at a low rate of interest to pay off their debts. Every landowner up to 100 acres is liable to forced labor for the Government, for which no remuneration whatever is given, and the hardship of this is aggravated by the practice of sending the laborers to distant parts of the country. Mr. Stuart thinks that the land is well able to pay the land tax, but the fellahs complain of a tax on date palms and on sheep. An erroneous impression has prevailed that the taxation of Egypt was increased in order to support the extravagance of the late Khedive, but this is not correct. The present scale of taxation was established before the beginning of the reign. As to the administration of justice in the native courts, it is, he says,

THE MODERN PLAGUES OF EGYPT,

A "FIGURE OF SPEECH."

The decisions are sold to the highest bidder. The mixed tribunals of natives and foreigners are worse. They are made instrumental in perpetrating the grossest extortion and fraud. Natives who obtain consular appointments claim the privilege of having cases tried by these tribunals, and are thus enabled to make them the means of defrauding their neighbors. The Greeks are the greatest extortioners amongst foreigners. The punishments too are barbarous. The use of the "courbash"—a whip made of the hide of the hippopotamus—and of the stick has increased since the rebellion, and persons have been bastinadoed in order to make them confess matters of which they knew nothing. Venality and corruption are so universal that nothing but the strong hand of foreign intervention can eradicate the abuses. One of the effects of giving power to the mixed tribunals is that the law which enacted that a fellah could not be dispossessed of his land without his consent has been set aside, and now the Greeks and other money-lenders, who have accumulated a load of debt upon them by extortionate interest, have got hold of their lands and driven them out. This grievance was at the root of the discontent which helped to recruit Arabi's ranks. In Upper Egypt the population is pauperised to such an extent that they are unable to cultivate the land properly, and are living at the point of starvation. The consequence of one single low Nile would be a famine. Their condition contrasts with that of the thriving population of the Delta. Their destitution is owing, amongst other causes, to arbitrary confiscation of their lands during the late reign, forced labor, which withdraws the hands from their own lands, and the borrowing of money at extravagant interest. Mr. Stuart offers a series of practical suggestions to increase the productiveness of the land, establish district banks, and reform the obvious abuses. In Upper Egypt, Arabi appealed to the fanaticism of the Mahometan population, but they are now undeceived as to his character, and proclaim him an imposter.

MERCILESS RACK-RENTING,

The London Standard, in commenting upon this report, doubts whether Lord Dufferin's projects will ever be realized in Egypt, and still more whether they can possibly be successful. Indeed, it can hardly be seriously affirmed that Lord Dufferin leaves the reputation of the Ministry that sent him to Egypt any higher than it was before he went there, or that he has added to his own celebrity, save as a writer of despatches couched in the vein of the finest irony. We are in Egypt as the representative [illegible] of the enemies of the faith of the majority of the population, without conferring them any material benefit to [illegible] them for this outrage on their feelings [illegible] to reconcile them to our presence. We refuse to assume sufficient responsibility to enable us to do the people any visible good, and we shall infallibly [illegible] rendering ourselves odious. Yet, if we [illegible] to depart, what would happen? The Khedive and his Egyptian Ottomans would quickly follow us, and a second Arabi would arise to follow in the steps of the first. It cannot be too explicitly stated, or too often repeated, that from the day when we drove Arabi's army out of Tel-el-Kebir and conducted Tewfik back to Cairo we have done absolutely nothing for the genuine settlement and practical reorganization of Egypt. Our troops are there, and ought to be there, as no real use is being made of their presence. We are adding to the taxes of the country without preparing for them any real advantage in exchange.

How a Panther Jumps over Fifty Feet.

While the African lion or tiger may compete with us in strength, in agility he is another has no rival living.

A gentleman of truth and candor said to me: "I was in Canada some years ago beyond the St. Lawrence, in November, in a family where I was stopping, had hung up against a pile of boards or lumber to cool or freeze, as is customary. A catamount (the Indian name in New England) smelled the meat in the woods close by and crept in the night to get a piece. In pulling down the quarter of beef he upset the whole pile of lumber, which came down with a loud noise, and he made three tremendous leaps from the spot. I saw the tracks in the snow; there was not a mark between them. I did not measure the distance myself, as a man did, and, I believe, correctly. The first jump was up hill, thirty feet, almost horizontal, to a large rock, fifty-four feet; the third, down hill, seventy-two feet.

A leap of thirty feet perpendicular to the branch of a tree, or a forty-foot plunge after a fatal shot, and falling dead almost at the hunter's feet, have been repeated; but the veracity is not questioned, and after making all possible allowance we must acknowledge there is not a creature living whose [illegible] compares with it.

The question then comes up, how is the superiority over other animals attained? The key to the above question we shall find in the coiled wire spring. This spring, pressed down on a base and liberated, springs ahead further than any other form. The reason is very simple. Every movement of substance must start from a base and be moved by an outside force. The coiled wire spring, when pressed down, becomes a spring its entire length. When let loose, the first turn jumps from its base, which is the second; the second adds its force to the first, jumping from the third, and so in succession to the last, which adds its force after the whole coil is flying from the outside has all. And this is precisely the case in the panther's leap. The forelegs and head are shot forward from the shoulders, the powerful muscles of the back straighten the curve of the spinal columns from the hips, while the great posterior muscles through the Achilles tendon and over the longest [illegible] in the animal economy, add the last impetus to a body already shooting ahead like an arrow. The serpentine flexibility is beautifully illustrated in the menagerie when the keeper thrusts his stick across the cage and orders Felis to jump over it. The head and shoulders rise and gracefully curve over the stick, beginning to descend on the opposite side when the last impetus is given by the hind feet, and the body alights gently as a rose, seeming without weight, concussion or the disturbance of a leaf.

TOPICS FOR WOMEN.

A WOMAN'S SUNNY TEMPER.

What a blessing to a household is a cheerful woman—one whose spirits are not affected by wet days, or little disappointments, or whose walk of human life does not soar in the sunshine of prosperity. Such a woman in the darkest hour of trial is the house like a little piece of sunshine weather. The magnetism of her smile, the electrical brightness of her looks and movements, affect every one. The children go to school with a sense of something gained to be achieved, and her husband goes into the world in a conqueror's spirit. No matter how people worry him, far off her presence shines, and he whispers to himself, "At home I shall find rest."

YOUNG HOUSEKEEPERS.

No young lady should be willing to undertake wifely responsibilities or obligations until she is fully capable of taking charge of a household. Some sensible person has said that household occupations are in themselves of no intellectual and moral exercise of no small importance, after which any lady has enough surplus time for books and the arts.

We fully endorse the sentiment, and think the improvement in our female colleges, many of which boast a wholesome department of domestic economy.

In the marriage outfit of the eldest daughter, how many a mother has been forced to the sacrifice of her own personal ease and comfort in giving up her old experienced cook to relieve the young mistress of a burden of embarrassment and trouble that would otherwise fall upon her untrained shoulders! But even with this admirable auxiliary (now almost obsolete since the extinction of slavery), there will be oppressive minor cares, duties and anxieties requiring a sacrifice of time and ease that the mistress may not be willing at all times to yield as murmuringly.

Be she ever so happily endowed with that enviable faculty of taking things lightly and patiently, ever estimating little mishaps at their full cost and no more, she will still find her position one of trial and embarrassment. There must be a regular and general method in everything if thrift, order and neatness prevail. It is in vain to enjoin early rising, and economy in pantry and cuisine, if the mistress be unpunctual and extravagant, and servants are never slow in learning that she does not practice what she teaches.

Let no young housekeeper despise industrial activity and a personal execution of all the rules instituted for the general welfare of her establishment. Then, and not until then, will we see comfort, happiness and prosperity.

DIET FOR INVALIDS.

BY JULIET CORSON.

Game and Poultry.

While the general rule holds good that food is the most wholesome, and that decay in animal flesh used for food is to produce symptoms of irritant poison game is often eaten in an advanced of decomposition without any percep- injury to the epicure. Microscopic ex- tion of meat which has been exposed medium summer temperature, from to 90° F., for three or four days, the development at that stage of a organism, termed by physiologists vibrio. This parasite seems to be in other meats than pork, and, trichinæ, is not destroyed by the pro- salting and smoking meat, or of cur- in brine. There is no reason to sup- that the flesh of game is exempt from presence of this natural product of de- tion. When meats containing it are thoroughly cooked, their consumption pro- gastric disturbance, sometimes fatal result. As game is generally broiled cured, the action of intense heat may the septic influence of the organism. Christison suggested the habit might to do with the impunity with which could consume high meat, as it has with those savage tribes who bird fish and flesh; but he also noted that the use of game only "high" to please a gourmand produced se- intestinal disturbance with persons un- used to eat it. Dr. Lethby says that with some the slightest commence- of decay is sufficient to cause disgust, absolute physical derangement, with "a piquant touch of decay," such as in ripe cheese and high game, is objectionable. Certainly venison is only eaten at a point of decay at which would be rejected, and long-hung mut- also favored. Several eminent authorities consider that cooking lessens the effect of decomposition in a considerable extent, and that the peptic properties of the gastric juice further counteract it. But even epi- upon the decayed fish so much enjoy- those savages "advanced," as Dr. son says, "in the cultivation of this ment of gastronomy."

The flesh of poultry, which abounds in nitrogenous or flesh-forming elements, and is deficient in fat or heat food, is considered a delicate food on account of its digestibility; its white meat is more easily digested than the dark, but the latter is more highly flavored. While the flesh of all poultry is less stimulating than meat, it affords all the nutriment which can be assimilated by an invalid; chickens and turkeys are the best poultry for use in all cases of impaired digestion; the flesh of ducks and geese is less digestible, and should not be used in weakened conditions of the digestive organs. Poultry may be prepared for the use of invalids by boiling or roasting, care being taken to serve it free from fat. A few good recipes for cooking it are given below.

CHICKEN JELLY.—(a nutritious, digestible food suitable for use in early convalescence; and in generally debilitated physical conditions.) —Skin a medium-sized fowl, cut the flesh from the bones in small pieces, and crush the bones; remove all fat, put the meat and bones into a saucepan with two quarts of cold water and two teaspoonsful of salt, cover the saucepan so that no steam can escape, and cook the chicken slowly for five hours; then strain the broth through a fine bolting-cloth sieve, or a folded towel laid in a colander, return it to the fire in a clean saucepan, and boil it, uncovered, until it is reduced about one-half, or until a little of it cooled on a saucer forms a jelly. Then season it palatably, and cool it in earthen moulds wet in cold water. Serve it in small quantities, either cold like wine jelly, or heated to form a broth.

CHICKEN WINE JELLY.—(a nutritious, digestible food, slightly stimulating, excellent in convalescence and in general weakness of the entire system).—Prepare this jelly according to the directions given in the recipe for chicken jelly, allowing it to boil until the jelly is found to be quite stiff on cooling a little of it; then add to it the strained juice of a lemon and a gill of good sherry or Madeira wine, and cool it in earthen moulds wet in cold water. Use it cold.

CHICKEN SOUFFLE.—(a light, digestible food, very palatable and nutritious, useful in any illness where any animal food is allowed by the physician).—Remove all skin and bone from the white meat of cold roast chicken, and chop half a pound of it very fine; then rub it through a fine sieve with a potato-masher. Next mix together in a saucepan over the fire one dessert-spoonful each of butter and flour until they are smoothly blended, and gradually stir into them one and a half gills of boiling water; let this sauce boil for one minute, then mix with the chicken, season it palatably with salt and pepper, and stir it over the fire until the mixture is scalding hot, when remove it from the fire. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth, and the yolks to a cream; have ready some small paper souffle cases, or some small dishes suitable for serving at the table; quickly mix with the chicken first the yolks and then the whites of the eggs. Put the mixture at once into the cases or dishes, and bake the souffles for fifteen minutes in a hot oven. Serve them hot as soon as they are done.—Harper's Bazar.

MORSELS FOR SUNDAY CONTEMPLATION.

Travellers change their guineas, not their characters.

Put not your trust in money, but put your money in trust.

Faith always implies the disbelief of a lesser fact in favor of a greater.

Controversy equalizes fools and wise men in the same way—and the fools know it.

God bless all good women! To their soft hands and pitying hearts we must all come at last.

The only Broad Church possible is that which has its creed in the heart, and not in the head.

You may set it down as a truth which admits of few exceptions, that those who ask your opinion really want your praise.

There are a good many real miseries in life that we can not help smiling at, but they are the smiles that make wrinkles and not dimples.

Why can't somebody give us a list of things which everybody thinks and nobody says, and another list of things that everybody says and nobody thinks?

Memory is a net. One finds it full of fish when he takes it from the brook, but a dozen miles of water have run through it without sticking.

If the sense of the ridiculous is one side of an impressible nature, it is very well; but if that is all there is in a man, he had better have been an ape and stood at the head of his profession at once.

We must have a weak spot or two in a character before we can love it much. People that do not laugh or cry, or take more of anything than is good for them, or use anything but dictionary words, are admirable subjects for biographies. But we don't care most for those flat-pattern flowers that press best in the herbarium.

There are three wicks to the lamp of a man's life: brain, blood and breath. Press the brain a little, its light goes out, followed by both the others. Stop the heart a minute and out go all three of the wicks. Choke the air out of the lungs, and presently the fluid ceases to supply the other centres of flame, and all is soon stagnation, cold and darkness.

An indorsing ink which does not dry quickly on the pad and is quickly taken by the paper is thus made: Aniline color in solid form, 16 parts; boiling distilled water, 80 parts; glycerine, 7 parts, and syrup, 3 parts. The color is dissolved in hot water and the other ingredients are added while the water is being agitated. This indorsing ink is said to acquire its good quality from the addition of the syrup.

For a useful lime wash for wood and stone this is the proposed preparation: Twenty litres of quicklime are slaked in a suitable vessel. One gramme of sulphate of zinc and 5 gramme of common salt are added. The latter causes the lime to dry without making any cracks. A very beautiful fawn color is produced by adding to the mixture 5 gramme of yellow ochre, or if a stone color is desired or preferred 2 gramme of umber and 1 of lamp black may be substituted. A common brush may be used in applying the wash.

Social Matters in Mexico.

Going a step higher into the classes, which might be called in English phraseology the "lower middle and middle classes," one has it still forced upon him that the demand has to be created before a trader can hope to thrive. You enter a house and are at once struck by the utter barrenness and inhospital look of the place. The walls are bare of any decoration save whitewash and the portrait or image of a saint or so. The floors are generally tiled, and bare as the walls—perhaps a few strips of rush matting may be strewed around; but such are not always to be found. The furniture consists of a table usually laden with a heap of tawdry grass ornaments of the most unæsthetic description. The chairs have none of the grace, but all the discomfort of a "Queen Ann." In a bedroom you may occasionally find a mattress; but not always—rush matting is used quite as frequently. The pillows are made to look pretty, with embroidered cases and so forth; and that probably is the only print you can observe that seems to indicate even a desire for elegance. "Home," in the old-fashioned sense, does not exist in Mexico any more than the word, or any correlative of it, exists in the Spanish language. A Mexican dresses himself and his horse. He makes a brave show, but his wife can only show herself occasionally, and his children go as they please. If he can look well and cut a dash, his modest wishes are gratified. I would not, of course, have it inferred that home luxury is unknown. In the larger cities you may encounter all the elegancies of life. But the possessors of them form a class apart. They are intensely aristocratic in their notions, so that their poorer fellow citizens have rarely an opportunity of having their appetites whetted by seeking these things that make home beautiful and desirable. If they were to see them now they would regard them as unattainable, from the enormous prices they command in this market. But it may be taken for granted that when the country generally shall have become acquainted with the ordinary methods of living among the Northern nations; when the implements of civilized housekeeping shall have been introduced into the country under better conditions than are at present given by the absurd regulation of the Custom House, the demand for these will be enormous, and the advantages offered to the dealers in every conceivable sort of every-day commodity, will equal for a time the most glowing that can be found in the history of the world's commerce.

Everything has a beginning, and the beginning of this new revelation can be observed by any one who has eyes in his head, at this present moment in the City of Mexico. The miserably appointed hotels are learning that in order to gain the patronage of people accustomed to all the modern luxuries of the north, they must present them with something better than was considered good enough for a ranchero, or even an abogado (lawyer) on his visit to the capital. Creature comforts of all sorts are provided, that in short, years ago, could hardly have been obtained for love or money. The rush of immigration will surely come soon, and every letter that is published in the States or England on matters of Mexican commerce gives it a little extra push. Those who are already in the field are reaping a golden harvest. The demand for most things far exceeds the supply; and prices are consequently enormously exaggerated. That cannot last long. Crowds of people are today making preparations to get some advantage out of this excessively understocked market, and they who get here first will be the best off.

GARNERED WITTICISMS.

A household pet: A car-pet.

In a crowd—"Who is that man?" "Oh, he is one of the most prominent Irish-Americans." "Who is that other one?" "He is a distinguished German-American." "And that one?" "A well-known French-American." "And that one over there with a bundle under his arm?" "Oh, he's a nobody—nothing but an American-American."

A Texas paper tells this cheerful tale of the experimental school of medicine: "A woman came to a prominent physician and asked for a remedy for her husband's rheumatism. The doctor gave her a perscription and said: 'Get that prepared at the drug store and rub it well over your husband's back. If it does any good, come and let me know. I've got a touch of rheumatism myself.'"

"Yes," said the culprit, "I'm a thief, but I don't want anybody to insinuate that my crime was the result of unfortunate stock speculatinn, and I won't have anybody say that I have hitherto borne an unblemished reputation. I have been a thief from infancy, and never bought a share of stock in my life. Call me eccentric, if you please, but I don't want to be mixed up with any of your amateurs. I am a professional, I am."

Too sober to shoot: At the recent pigeon-shooting at Houston, a gentleman who had claimed to be a crack shot missed six successive birds, and his disgusted friends, who had been betting on him, were mad enough to drown him. "What kind of shooting is that?" asked one of them indignantly. "I know it's my fault. I am too sober. No sober man can expect to hit birds that fly so crooked. If I had three more beers I'd have scattered feathers, and don't you forget it."

Rescued from Agonizing Death.

NEW YORK.—Mr. James White, 1852 Broadway, formerly chief instructor in Dickel's Riding School, in this city, said to a newspaper reporter: "I broke my shoulder, arm and elbow, splitting the socket in four parts. Rheumatism set in and I employed the best physician. He tried everything, but I grew worse, and at last he said: 'I have one more thing to try and if that fails nothing can give you relief, and that is St. Jacobs Oil.' I used this great pain-reliever, and am able to use my arm, free from all rheumatic trouble. I have also recommended the remedy to a number of people, and in every case they have been speedily and effectually cured."

Miss Jennie Ace, a lighthouse-keeper's daughter on the English coast, has just received from the Empress Augusta a gold brooch worth fifty guineas, in token of her brave rescue of a boat's crew.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truely a most valuable medicine,and will surely cure Billiousness,Fever and Ague, Stomach. Liver and Kidney Complaints even when all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all.—Ezch.—Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requsted to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

The next sitting of Division Court No. 5 will be held in Markdale on the 21st June, and in Chatsworth the day following.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION.

Why do so many people we see around us, seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion,Constipation. Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the food. Yellow Skin. when for 75cts., we will sell them Shiloh's Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough medicine we have ever sold. a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croop and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, to test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10cts. 50 cts. and $1. If your Lungs are sore, Chest, or Back Lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

SHILOH'S CATARAH REMEDY.

A marvellous cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria Canker mouth, and Headache. With each bottle there is an ingenious nasal injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50c. Sold by Wm. Brown's general store Markdale.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND

Is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

The Toronto Daily World is the speciest, newsyist paper of the day, only 25 cts a month, just the thing for mechanics. Subscriptions taken at this office will be sent direct through the mail, specimen copies can be seen at the STANDARD Office.

RUNAWAY.—On Tuesday, a young lad named Harkley, in the employ of R. P. Butchart & Co., was leaving the stable on Baker street, with a horse and buggy, a front wheel came off and the horse ran away. The boy held on well till thrown out at Wolfe's corner, where the rig colided with a telegraph post. The buggy had the shafts broken and was otherwise demoralized, but fortunately neither boy nor horse were hurt.—O.S. Times.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks. but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Wm. Lucas & Co. bankers, Markdale, have $200,000.00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest: moderate charges.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132-84.

Our correspondents will do well to bear in mind that their copy will require to reach us on Tuesday, to insure an insertion the same week.

Work given out. On receipt of your address we will make an offer by which you can earn $3 to $7 evenings, at your home. Men, Woman, Boys or Girls can do it. H. C. Wilkinson & Co., 195 and 197 Fulton St., New York.

AN ACROSTIC,

Look out ye farmers and threshers all
And see that you buy for Spring, Summer [and Fall
Right splendid good oil.
Don't be misled by statements bland,
Insist upon having the very best brand,
Now good as ever, in fact it is grand,
Everlasting wear without grit or sand,
Machines run smoothly, no jarring or noise,
And engines too in its use rejoice.
Carding also it suits, as you plainly see,
Heavy gristing cannot do without me.
In fact all machines are blessed by its use,
New or old it will save from wear and abuse,
Every man try it, we are sure it will please.
Our initials, when read, will give the cue
In looking for oil, the best and the true,
Long in the market, but ever new.

SASH AND DOOR FACTORY.—This new enterprise is now in operation and doing a good business. The proprietors, Messrs. Wilson & McKechnie are industrious, obliging, practical men, and will supply a long-felt want in the above business in Flesherton. They are now prepared to fill orders for plaining, scroll sawing, sash & door's, fencing and all kinds of building material, while they expect to have their matcher in operation in a few weeks. Their machinery is all new and the most improved, and runs like a top. They also carry on the carriage making in connection, in this line Mr. Wilson has already gained a reputation for superior workmanship and good material in the manufacture of carriages of all descriptions of which they have sold a good number this season, and have now on hand a number ready to go out.

MARBLE WORKS.—Mr. Vanzant, has opened his marble works in Sproule's block, next door to R. J. Sproule's store, where he is turning out tomb stones which show good workmanship and beautiful design, the proprietor reports prospects good. He has secured orders for several monuments, the material for which is on the the way.

BRICK MAKING.—Mr. Varty has put in a brick machine and will in future be enabled to turn out the best of brick in large quantities, the increased demand for brick has necessitated this extra expense and we have no doubt it will be a profitable investment to the proprietor, and will no be doubt appreciated by the public in their increased patronage. Mr. Varty has also. during the past season erected a comfortable brick dwelling, and is fencing and improving th surroundings.

Mr. M. Richardson has removed the building occupied as a drug store and is building a fine large brick on the corner, the stone work is now built and the brick work will be pushed forward with all possible speed.

Mr. Sullivan has built on the site of the old skating rink, and is now in the tin business.

The cheese factory is doing a large and satisfactory business this season. Mr. Garrett, the manager, is efficient and thoroughly understands his business, giving his patrons every confidence in him as as the factory.

Chatsworth.

Dr. Bennet left on Monday for Peterborough where he will spend a few months in order to recuperate his health.

The fire hall is now completed, and looks quite imposing.

A. McGill is doing a very large trade in harvest machinery this season. He will erect his new building as soon as the rush of work is over. The new building will be 70 feet long and two story high.

The C. O. O. F. pic-nic, last Friday, at Kelly's grove was not as largely attended as was expected, yet a very pleasant time was spent.

Mr. M. Wilson, of the new tin establishment is getting rigged up and is likely to do a good business.

The volunteer company will leave on Friday for Niagara, where they go into camp.

The Cattle fair on Monday, was well attended, but beef cattle were scarce.

Sad to His Death by the Son of the Man He had Murdered.

The Terrible Ending of a Series of Tragedies.

The slayer of Capt. Nutt is himself slain, and now lies lifeless in the same room at the hotel in which the tragedy of Dec. 24th last was enacted. The slayer this time is James Nutt, Capt. Nutt's eldest son, who is now in jail. Just as dusk was drawing on and many people were passing along the street, the sound of five pistol shots rang out upon the air in the direction of the Post Office. In a moment everybody was running to the scene, and word quickly passed along that Dukes was dead. The excited crowd gathered aronnd the Post Office, and there on the floor lay the lifeless body of Nicholas Lyman Dukes. The work was done so quickly, and so paralyzing was its effect upon those who witnessed it that it was difficult to get the correct story. Officers Frank Pegg, Geo. B. Hutchins, Alf. Collins, and others who saw the occurrence describe it as follows:

James Nutt was standing against a post inside of a room that joins the Post Office and fronts on Main street. The room was until lately occupied by a drug store, and the front wall taken out, it being now fitted up for a room for the First National Bank. While standing there Dukes came down the street from the direction of the Jennings Hotel, walking briskly, with a cane under his arm. Just as he turned the corner toward the Post Office door, young Nutt stepped outside, pulled a revolver, and fired two shots at him in rapid succession. Dukes looked around, and started to run into the Post Office door, whereupon Nutt fired again and followed in close pursuit. Just as Dukes got inside the Post Office his assailant fired two more shots, and Dukes fell heavily to the floor upon his face.

E. A. Lingo rushed into the office and stooped to pick him up. Dukes tried to say something, but could only gasp, and in a moment he was dead. By this time officer Pegg reached young Nutt and laid hold of him. The latter struggled fiercely to free himself, but when he discovered it was an officer he quietly yielded, and was taken to the jail. Dukes' body was removed to his room at the hotel, where Coroner Sturgeon impanelled a jury. No testimony was taken, owing to the difficulty of getting witnessess, and the inquest was adjourned until next morning at 9 o'clock.

On examining the body it was found that three of the balls entered the back near the side under the left arm and penetrated toward the heart, lodging in the breast very near the skin, where they were cut out. They all three entered within two or three inches of each other. On Duke's body was found his old pistol, the one with which he killed Nutt, and hanging to his suspender button in front was a dirk-knife. The pistol used by young Nutt was a 42-calibre Smith and Wesson. He had in his pocket another smaller pistol, which he refused to surrender to Officer Pegg, but gave it to Officer Martin. A fourth ball slightly grazed Dukes's leg near the foot, while the fifth missed its aim, passed through one of the Post Office lock boxes.

The revolver with which the shooting was done is the same that Capt. Nutt carried on the morning of his death. Young Nutt gave himself up, and is now in jail. He was calm, but as pale as a sheet. Excitement is running high.

The causes leading to the tragedy were as follows:

Capt. A. C. Nutt, cashier of the Pennsylvania State Treasury, was shot and instantly killed in Uniontown on Sunday, Dec. 24, 1882, by N. L. Dukes, a leading lawyer and a member elect of the Legislature. The tragedy grew out of Dukes's alleged improper intimacy with Capt. Nutt's eldest daughter. Nutt, accompanied by his nephew, Breckenbridge, went to Dukes's room in the Jennings House by appointment. Nutt entered the room, but Breckenbridge remained outside. A scuffle followed between Nutt and Dukes, and Breckenbridge entered and endeavored to separate them. A man connected with the hotel ran in. He found Breckenbridge holding Nutt. He at once seized Dukes and succeeded in getting him into a corner of the room. At this moment Dukes raised his revolver and shot Nutt through the head. The wounded man fell into his nephew's arms and expired in a few moments. Dukes walked to the Sheriff's office and surrendered himself.

Dukes' trial opened at Uniontown on March 12, 1883. Letters between Dukes and Nutt were produced in evidence concerning the former's intimacy with Miss Lizzie Nutt. Dukes admitted the intimacy, but alleged that the young woman encouraged him, claimed that other men whom he named bore the same relations towards her, and said that under similar circumstances Nutt would have been guilty of the same conduct. In his reply Nutt said:

"If I had invaded the sanctity of a home, as you have confessed to doing, I would hold myself fit only to be shot. When I cross the threshold of a man's door and become the guest of his family or any member of it, his wife and daughters are as sacred to me socially as my own. I have the physical courage to seek you out and give you the alternative of repairing the ruin which you have wrought or suffering death. It remains with you whether there shall be a legal farce or a tragedy. You cannot escape from me or evade me. Leaving Uniontown when I go there will not avail you. I will be home again on the 23rd."

Dukes replied by applying an offensive epithet to Nutt's daughter, and said he would be justified by Nutt's letter in shooting him on sight. He appointed the meeting with him at which the tragedy took place. He said he thought the meeting would result in an amicable understanding

Breckenbridge was the principal witness at the trial. Two others described the shooting. After being out a short time the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, though Judge Wilson's charge was distinctly against Dukes. "The verdict is one that gives dissatisfaction to the Court," Judge Wilson said, after it was announced, "because we thought the evidence sufficient to justify a different verdict. The prisoner is discharged."

An indignation meeting of the citizens was held the next night, and circulars signed by leading citizens were posted denouncing Dukes as an assassin. He was hanged in effigy from telegraph poles and gas lamps in a dozen different places. He was permitted to resing his seat in the legislature.

No Chance to Shoot.

One Sunday afternoon, at a hotel in Alabama, we were talking about how great disappointments sometimes soured a man, when a chap who had been chewing plug tobacco all by himself over by the window turned around and said:

"Gentlemen, you've hit it plumb centre! Up to four years ago I was a man who allus wore a grin on his face, and I'd divide my last chaw with a stranger. Folks now call me mean and ugly, and I kin hardly get a man to drink with me."

"Then you have suffered a great disappointment?" I queried.

"I have, stranger—I have. Ten years ago a man in this very town cleaned me out on a mortgage, sold me out on an execution, and chuckled when I took the dirt road for Tennessee. I orter have shot him, but somehow I didn't do it, and arter I got to Tennessee things began preying on my mind. Day and night I could hear a voice saying: 'Go back and pluck old Brown,' and I lost flesh and came powerful near going into a decline."

"Yes?"

"Well, that voice kept talking and I kept waiting, but in about three years I shouldered my rifle and turned my steps this way, my mind fully made up to shoot old Brown on sight. He had a patch o' land out west o' here, and used to ride out every day. I made for that spot, calkerlating to biff him as he drove up to the gate. Nobody had seen me, and nobody would know who did the shooting."

"Yes?" some one answered as he made a long pause.

"Well, I got fixed and waited, and I was feeling real good for the first time in three years when I heard hoofs and looked out for the old man. It wasn't him. True as you sot there the old skinflint had gone and died only a week before, giving me a tramp of 200 miles to say 'howdy? to his executor! Gentlemen, I can't describe my feelings! Just think of one white man playing such a trick on another! It was wuss than Arkansaw mud warmed over for next season. I was took with shakes and chills and a cough, and here I am, sour, cross, mulish, ugly, and realizing that I don't stand no more show of going to heaven when I die than that thar' dog does of swallowing a postoffice without any preliminary chawin!"

A Sad Story of London (England) Life.

A little girl had been apprehended for stealing plants from a South London Park. The address she gave was at a house in a squalid back street in the borough—at least a couple of miles from the park where she had purloined the snowdrops, and it was soon discovered that the tale the child told as to her mother being ill was quite true. The poor creature was found confined to her bed in a dark and miserably-furnished back room, and there she had lain dying of consumption since last winter set in. The father was in prison, and the sick woman's only means of support were her two children, respectively two and four years older than the child in custody, and they all earned a few pence each daily by selling cigar lights near London bridge. At a glance it was evident what had become of the stolen flowers. A piece of board was fastened shelf-wise across the foot of the sick woman's bedstead, and on it, in three or four old gallipots, were as many bunches of crocuses, snowdops, and wall flowers, each in a setting of green grass. The poor invalid had not the least suspicion that they had been dishonestly obtained, and the person inquiring being in unofficial costume and perceiving her condition charitably refrained from enlightening her. "You are looking at my garden, sir," her white face lighting with a wan smile. "They are wild flowers, sir, so my little girl tells me, bnt she has to go ever so far to pick 'em. When the winter weather went away and the sun came out I began to feel a craving for the sight and smell of fresh flowers that I couldn't express it if I had tried. It is through lying here so many weeks so dreary and dull and so many hours all by myself, I suppose; but I knew it was no use thinking about 'em at the price they are when they first come in the spring, though I couldn't help thinking and saying that if I had a few I felt sure they would do me more good than all the physic. And so without saying a word about it to anybody, my little Kitty—a mere mite of 7, sir—she gets up at five in the morning, and before breakfast time she's back with as pretty a bunch as ever you set eyes on. They didn't last long, poor things, in this stuffy little room, and it seems almost a shame to bring 'em here out of the fields where they grow, but there's thousands of 'em there Kitty tells me, and I don't think that those who have their health to go and see 'em growing would grudge me just a few brought away for my share." "No one certainly would, supposing the little girl you speak of comes by them honestly," the visitor returned. "No fear about that, sir," replied the sick mother confidently. "Why, I happened only to say something like what you just said when she brought home the first lot, and she fell crying so that I didn't know what to do with her." So the kind-hearted park official came away with his original purpose unfulfilled, and the magistrate being informed of the circumstances discharged the terrified little prisoner with a caution. Whether she ran home and made confession I cannot say; but unless she did so within a week it was too late, for at the end of no longer an interval she was motherless, and it was my privilege to assist in placing Kitty and her two sisters in a country home, far removed from the vice and temptations of London streets, and where wild flowers in plenty may be had for the picking.

That the craze for acting among the "upper ten" of London city is pretty strong, the following note from one manager to another appears to prove: "My Dear B——, I am in immediate want of several 'guests' for my coming revival. I should be much obliged to you, therefore, if you would kindly send me two or three earls at your earliest convenience."

"Queer enough," remarked his companion. "Rather unusual. You were named after some very dear friend of your father, I suppose?" "Yes," said the doctor, "a very dear friend indeed—my mother."

The Order of the Garter.

It is a curious circumstance in English administrative annals that, during a tenure of office which has lasted close on three years and a half, Mr. Gladstone, until the death of Lord Harrowby, had but one garter to dispose of, whereas no fewer than five of the present knights date from the short period of Conservative rule in 1866-68, which lasted less than two years and a half. Several foreign princes have been admitted to the order since 1874, the last being the King of Saxony; but these are extra knights, twenty-five ribbons having been reserved for subjects, not descendants of George II., by the statute of 1805. How eagerly the garter has been sought for is matter of history. For five centuries it may be said to have been "the last infirmity of noble mind" in England, and since 1603 in Scotland, too. James I., while as yet only the Sixth of Scotland, was generally understood to have accepted the garter from Queen Elizabeth, by way of compensation for his mother's loss of her head; and the English Queen judiciously supplemented the gift with a pension of £5,000 a year. One of William III.'s allies among the German princes thought money could hardly be weighed in the scale against the garter, and his Serene Highness reduced a claim of £400,000 to £100,000, in consideration of a garter. The late Earl of Fitzwilliam, on the other hand, on being offered a garter, asked what it would cost, and being told £1,000, said he thought he could do better with his money.

A Dog's Painful Voyage.

While longshoremen were unloading a lot of telegraph wire from the steamship De Ruyter, at the foot of West Twenty-fourth street, N. Y., recently, they found a small black-and-tan terrier in the centre of a coil that lay on the floor of the ship. He had been stowed away there in some way while the ship was loading, and was unable to escape. During the passage the wire had shifted, and one leg of the little fellow was caught under the coil. The leg was broken and he was pinned down for no one knows how long. The ship sailed from Antwerp on May 12. Mr. H. E. Paterson, United States customs inspector, who was present, says that the dog was greatly emaciated by his fast of twenty-five days. He was very cross when found, and bit the hand of one of the men who attempted to release him, making a very painful wound. His temper improved after he had some water. His broken leg and his general health were attended to by the ship's surgeon, and he will hereafter serve as one of the crew of the De Ruyter. He was too weak to do more than blink his eyes und wag the end of his tail when any attention was paid him, although he got up once during the day and hobbled across the decks. Under the care of the ship's surgeon and a nourishing diet of beef tea and milk he is recovering more rapidly than was expected. It was his left hind leg that was caught under the shifting cargo. From its appearance the surgeon thinks the coil of wire caught it soon after he got into the hold, and that he was held in the one position, with the wire cutting into the leg, all the way over. The dog has been identified as the property of a clerk in the employ of the ship's owners at Antwerp. The little animal was running about the decks when the cargo was stowed and probably fell down a hatchway. He will be returned to his owner when the ship reaches Antwerp, although the crew, who have made a pet of him, object to this course.

THE WORD "ELECTRICITY."

How the Jealous Makers of an "Electric" Oil Endeavored to Suppress Briggs' Electric Oil.

The Latter Triumphant in the Contest.

Electricity is recognized as a powerful agent in modern medicine, and the great success which has attended the use of Briggs' Electric Oil has naturally created for it jealous enemies among the makers of medicine alleged to be cures for diseases of a similar nature to those which have been so successfully combatted by Briggs' Electric Oil. The most prominent and active among these enemies have been Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, manufacturers of a medicine called "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil." These jealous persons sought to prevent us from using the word "electric" on our label, claiming that it was an infringement upon their trade mark, being similar to the word "eclectric." It will be observed that the word "electric" means something, and is used in connection with our oil because the oil is charged with electricity by a powerful battery, as set forth in the sworn evidence of the maker before the court. Both Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, on oath, deposed that no electricity whatever was put into "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil," and this in the face of the fact that on their labels appears a cut of a bottle, from which a large number of formidable thunderbolts are radiating. The statement is also made that the oil is "combined with electricity." The expose of this fraud upon the people was the grand result of the ligitation, so far as the manufacturers of "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil" were concerned. It amounted to an actual acknowledgement, under oath, by the makers of the oil, that they had been palming off on the public a medicine said to contain electricity which did not contain anything of the sort. After being a long time before the court, the proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil, having stated under oath that their oil was charged with electricity, were confirmed in the use of the label bearing the word "electric," and showing the device of the five cell battery with which the oil is charged in the course of its manufacture; and to-day Briggs' Electric Oil stands before the people, its claim to be what it is having been vindicated by the Canadian High Court of Chancery.

A Chinese Bed-Spread.

Among the many elegant presents Mr. Russel Leech, of the Smithsonian Institution, recently brought his charming wife and family from California is a remarkably beautiful and elaborately embroidered Chinese bed-spread, with pillow shams to match. The materials are pale blue and crimp pink silks, neatly quilted. Richly embroidered in appropriate colors are groups of storks forming centre and corner pieces, while a graceful border is formed of delicately tinted flowers in the fine needle work so deftly wrought by the skillful fingers of the Chinese. Heavy cords and tassels of blue and pink silk make a substantial finish to these beautiful articles.

DIET FOR INVALIDS.

BY JULIET CORSON.

Meats.

Meat for the use of invalids should be chosen fer three qualities—digestibility, nutriment, and suitability to the case in hand; the last consideration is the most important. A meat may be tender, nutritious, and ordinarily digestible, but if from any idiosyncrasy of the patient, or from his lack of capacity to assimilate its nutritive properties, it fails to afford the desired nourishment, its use should not be continued. Presupposing that the physician is cognizant of his patient's physical peculiarities, he is the best judge of his diet, and usually will indicate it; but general information on the subject is always useful to those in charge of the sick-room.

Beef is the most used in health; it is the most stimulating and nutritious of all flesh when the system is able to digest it, and its flavor does not offend the most fastidious palate; it is always in season. But in some physical conditions the use of mutton is preferable, because it is less stimulating, less highly flavored, and more digestible In such cases it is really more nutritious than beef, because its nutritive elements can be assimilated; for instance, mutton is a better meat than beef for dyspeptics. The broth made from mutton is no more digestible than that of beef, and is less nutritious. If all fat is removed from it in cooking, its flavor is more delicate. Lamb should not be used by dyspeptics, although tender, because its soft, semi-glutinous tissue renders complete mastication difficult. If lamb is used during illness it should be broiled, because by that process its loose texture is made comparatively dense, and the entire substance of the flesh is thoroughly cooked. The flavor of lamb is of course more delicate than that of mutton. As the indigestibility of veal is due to this looseness of fibre, it also should be thoroughly cooked.

There is no reason why underdone meat should be considered more nutritious than that which is moderately and properly cooked, with all its juices preserved. The chemical elements of underdone meat are not sufficiently acted upon by heat to be either readily digested or assimilated. Unless a physician orders raw or partly cooked meat, it is far better to give an invalid well-done meat, or that which is only medium rare.

Of course pork should not be eaten by any one who has not the strongest of digestive organs. Salt pork with lean flesh is difficult to digest; fat salt pork cut very thin and broiled is sometimes given to invalids as an "appetizer" in New England. Boiled English bacon is used by dyspeptics in England, where it is considered by physicians to possess exceptional qualities more or less curative in dyspepsia. It should if possible be cooked in a double gridiron over a moderate fire, and when delicately browned, served hot with a very little Cayenne pepper dusted over it. When the fire is not in good condition for broiling, the bacon may be laid on slices of bread arranged in a dripping-pan, and quickly baked in a very hot oven; the bread will absorb all the fat which flows from the bacon; of course it is not to be eaten by the dyspeptic invalid, but the toast with the bacon on it is not a bad breakfast dish for healthy people.

I here give several recipes which will be useful:—

PORTABLE BEEF TEA (a stimulating nutrient, useful in general illness, and during travelling).—Chop two pounds of lean beef very fine, put it into an earthern bowl with one ounce of gelatine and one pint of cold water, and soak it for an hour; then put it into a saucepan and gradually heat it to the boiling point; then strain it through a fine wire sieve, and put it into a wide-mouthed glass bottle or jar; set the jar in a saucepan, and let the beef tea heat again; while the water boils cork the jar tight, and seal it. The jar can then be taken from the boiling water and cooled. When the beef tea is wanted for use, dissolve two teaspoonsful of it in half a cupful of boiling water, season it with a little salt, and give it to the patient hot.

BEEF JUICE ON TOAST (a stimulating, nutritious, digestible food, useful in general illness where the system requires concentrated nutriment; in disorders of the alimentary canal this food is of especial use, as it can be digested and assimilated with ease.)—Broil a slice of lean round steak for six minutes on each side, taking care not to burn it; meantime make a slice of delicate toast; when the beef is broiled, put it on a plate and cut it in very small pieces; sprinkle it lightly with salt, set another plate on it, and squeeze the beef between the two, letting the juice run out on the toast; serve the toast hot.

CHOPPED BEEFSTEAK (a nutritious, stimulating food, more digestible than unchopped steak, and valuable in all sickness caused by malnutrition).—Trim the fat from a pound of round or sirloin steak, cut the meat in inch pieces, put it into a meat chopper or mincing machine, and chop it for five minutes; then take from the top of the meat the fine pulp which rises during the operation of chopping; continue to chop and to remove the pulp until only the fibre of the meat remains. Press the pulp into a round flat cake, and broil it over a very hot fire for about five minutes on each side; season it lightly with salt and Cayenne pepper, and serve it hot.

In selecting beefsteak for invalids, some persons choose the filet, or tenderloin, because it seems most tender; it is hardly more digestible on that account, for its looseness of fibre does not favor complete mastication; and it is less nutritious than sirloin or round steaks, because its muscular tissue is not so well nourished as that of the last-named cuts. Beef for the use of invalids should either be broiled quickly over a very hot fire and lightly seasoned with salt and Cayenne pepper, roasted at an open fire, or baked in a very hot oven without any water in the pan; if the inside of beef is purple, it is not sufficiently cooked to be easily digested; the color of properly cooked beef is pinkish-red. The inner cuts are the most digestible.

Mutton cooked for invalids should either be broiled or roasted like beef, or made into broth with the addition of some farinaceous food.

MUTTON BROTH WITH BARLEY (a nutritious digestible food, less stimulating than that of beef tea, and more suitable for use in any disorder of the digestive organs).—Cut the lean meat from two pounds of the neck of mutton, free it from all fat, and put it into a saucepan with two quarts of cold water; remove any small bits of the bone which may have been broken in chopping it, and put the bone with the meat; set the saucepan over the fire, and let its contents slowly approach the boiling-point; if any scum arises, remove it. Meantime pick over half a cupful of pearl-barley, wash it thoroughly in cold water, put it in a bowl, and cover it with warm water; after the mutton broth boils, drain the barley and add it to the broth, together with two level teaspoonsful of salt and a small red pepper, or a dust of Cayenne; cover the saucepan, and let the broth simmer very gently for two hours; then remove the bone, and serve the broth with the mutton and barley in it. If the digestive organs are very much enfeebled, the broth may be strained before using. The fat can be entirely removed from the broth by laying pieces of soft white paper successively on its surface; the paper will absorb the fat, but not the broth.

MUTTON-CHOPS, BROILED (a nutritious dish, less stimulating than beef, and more digestible; useful in general convalescence, and more suitable than beef for delicate invalids, women, and children).—Use chops cut from the shoulder or loin of full-grown tender mutton; to insure having the chops juicy let them be about an inch thick; trim off nearly all fat, put them between the bars of a double gridiron, and broil them quickly over a very hot fire—five minutes on each side; serve them on a hot dish, with a very little salt, pepper and butter, and a slice of dry toast or a plain boiled potato, as the patient's condition will permit.—Harper's Bazar.

The Egg-Dance in India.

The Indian egg dance is not, as one might expect from the name given it, a dance upon these fragile objects. It is executed in this wise. The dancer, dressed in a corsage and very short skirt, carries a willow wheel of moderate diameter fastened horizontally upon the top of her head. Around this wheel threads are fastened, equally distant from each other, and at the end of each of these threads is a slip noose, which is kept open by a glass head. Thus equipped, the young girl comes towards the spectators with a basket full of eggs, which she passes around for inspection, to prove that they are real, not imitations. The music strikes up a jerky monotonous strain, and the dancer begins to whirl around with great rapidity. Then, seizing an egg, she puts it in one of the slip nooses, and, with a quick motion throws it from her in such a way as to draw the knot tight. The swift turning of the dancer produces a centrifugal force which stretches the thread out straight like a ray shooting from the circumference of the circle. One after another, the eggs are thrown out in these slip nooses until they make a horizontal aureole or halo above the dancer's head. Then the dance becomes more rapid—so rapid, in fact, that it is difficult to distinguish the features of the girl. The moment is critical; the least false step, the least irregularity, of time, and the eggs dash against each other. But how can the dance be stopped? There is but one way—this is to remove the eggs in the way in which they have been put in place. This operation is by far the most delicate of the two. It is necessary that the dancer, by a single motion, exact and unerring, should take hold of the egg and remove it from the noose. A single false motion of the hand, the least interference with one of the threads and the general arrangement is suddenly broken, and the whole performance disastrously ended. At last all the eggs are successfully removed, and then the dancer stops, and without seeming in the least dizzied by the dance of twenty-five or thirty minutes, advances with a firm step to the spectators and presents them with the eggs, which are immediately broken in a flat dish to prove that there is no trick in the performance.

The Art of Singing.

It must have struck every intelligent frequenter of the concert-rooms to what hopeless straits an enthusiastic admirer of any particular singer is put when asked to give reasons for appreciating the merits of his favorite. The answer, if one is given, is often couched in vague generalities, and in some cases may be said to amount to literally nothing at all. The artist has a good voice, one is told, a clear enunciation, has performed certain tours de force with success, and even (for such reasons have ere this been given) his general appearance and deportment are pleasing. Why should this incapacity to give a reason for liking a thing exist? The explanation is clear enough to those who have turned their attention to the fact that an audience taken collectively knows little or nothing of the art of singing and even were the very executant, who is the object of applause, interrogated as to the cause of his or her success, in but few cases, probably, would a satisfactory explanation be forthcoming, for although he or she may have received such education in the art as is usually afforded, that education does not take into account the fact that explanation may sometimes be required. There exists, indeed, no complete and intelligent system of vocal training. Pupils are not required to reason; suffice it if, after years of toil, by hook or crook, rightly or wrongly, they acquire the power to produce certain effects. It may be pointed out as an extraordinary fact that while singing is the most widely diffused of all arts, no art is more in its infancy with regard to the principles on which it is taught. I will not stop to offer an explanation of the anomaly. A fine voice may go a long way with an uncritical audience, and there are many singers, I fear, who set a higher value on the apparent satisfaction of others than on the absolute consciousness of having satisfied themselves.—The Nineteenth Century.

The work of freeing the slaves still goes on in Brazil. The Condessa de Barral e Pedra Branca gave liberty, on her birthday, to forty slaves, the last she possessed, raising to about one hundred in all the number she has emancipated gratuitously. In Ceara the headquarters of the movement, the Quixeramobim Society commenced it, existence on March 25th with the emancipation of thirty-two slaves. On the 11th of the same month a society was established at Clato, when twenty slaves were freed; on the 18th the town of Pereira formed a society which is preparing to make a number of liberations. Several emancipations since last mail are also reported from Pernambuco. In Amazanos a bill has been brought in to vote 10,000 miles to the Emancipation Society of Manaos, and at the opening of the library two slaves were freed.

A Pertinent Rebuke.

A good story is going about the clubs concerning a New York millionaire who owns a big stock farm in New Jersey. He has put in force strict rules about the admittance of curiosity-seekers, and if one happens to get in, he is soon hustled off. The other day a neighboring farmer called on business. He had never been on the place before, and entering at a gate he found open was strolling around looking for the superintendent, when the owner, who happened to be there, encountered him. Supposing him to be merely an idler or prying person, he asked him what he was doing there. The farmer, taken aback by such an address, replied: "Nothing." The owner said: "Do you know at which gate you came in?" "I do," said the farmer. "Well, then," said the owner, "get out there as soon as you can;" and the farmer walked out. Shortly after the superintendent came up and inquired if neighbor so-and-so had been there. He was the only one anywhere about who had timber they wanted very much, and they wanted it immediately. He had promised to come that morning and see about the sale of it. "Well," said the owner of the farm, "I shouldn't wonder if I had just sent him off with a flea in his ear. I found a man strolling about here, and supposing him to be one of these stragglers I cleared him out. Where does he live? I will drive over and see him." Off he started at once. Reaching the farm-house he drove in, and seeing him began an apology, but was cut short by the farmer, who inquired if he knew at which gate he came in. He said he did. "Then," says the farmer, "I want you to get out as quick as you can;" and the owner of the stock farm was obliged to depart.—New York Tribune.

An Advertising Swindle.

The Manchester police are trying to arrest a man who has swindled a number of people in that city in an ingenious manner. The man advertised in one of the evening papers that he wanted to borrow £30, by which he could realise £100, offering to give the best security for the return of the money within a month, together with a bonus of £7. In one case a widow lady answered the advertisement, and a gentlemanly-looking man, a foreigner, called upon her, giving the name of John Christian. He offered her as security for the advance a number of pawn tickets, purporting to relate to a quantity of valuable jewellery. She lent him £30, and in a few days he called upon her again, and obtained another £20, giving her at the same time a promissory note for £56, 10s., the £6, 10s. being the interest he promised for the loan. As the lady did not hear from him within the time promised she sent some one to an address he had given, and it was then found that it was a fictitious address, and that several letters addressed to it had been returned to the senders by the post office authorities. In a number of cases the man had been successful in obtaining money in this manner. The police have communicated with the pawnbrokers whose names were on the tickets, but in most instances the tickets were found to be valueless.

The English Robin.

The English robin is a better songster than I expected to find him. The poets and writers have not done him justice. He is of the royal line of the nightingale, and inherits some of the qualities of that famous bird. His favorite hour for singing is the gloaming, and I used to hear him the last of all. His song is peculiar, jerky, and spasmodic, but abounds in the purest and most piercing tones to be heard—piercing from their smoothness, intensity, and fullness of articulation; rapid and crowded at one moment, as if something had suddenly given way, then as suddenly pausing, and, scintillating at intervals, bright, tapering shafts of sound. It stops and hesitates, and blurts out its nots like a stammerer; but when they do come they are marvellously clear and pure. I have heard green hickory branches thrown into a fierce blaze jet out of the same fine, intense musical sounds on the escape of the imprisoned vapors in the hard wood as characterize the robin's song.—Longman's for May.

A Bathing Costume.

One of the earliest of this season's seashore bathers to fall under careful observation wore a garment of loosely woven but rather thick blue flannel, dark navy blue, with very short sleeves that fitted the arm closely and a loose collar that showed her brown throat. From her neck to just below the knee it was one garment. Over this she wore a short skirt of the same material, the belt of which was a broad piece of blue webbing fastening with a strong buckle. "Moderate pressure on the waist does not inconvenience the swimmer," the writer says, "and if the belt should happen to give out, she could easily kick off the skirt and come to shallow water, where a cloak could be given to her in which she could walk to her bathing house. She was barefooted, and was one of the comparatively few girls who haven't corns that render their feet unfit for publication."

A little girl stopped in the midst of her play one day, clasping her hands to her neck as she felt a sharp pain there, exclaiming, "Oh! oh!" "What is it, dear?" said grandma, "a stitch in your neck?" "Why, gran'ma," she asked, with a terrified look, "are our heads sewed on?"

Lord Rokeby, just deceased, was the last surving Guardsman who had served with the brigade at Quatre Bras and Waterloo, and the last of those British officers who were present at the Duchess of Richmond's historic ball at Brussels on the night of June 15, 1815, when he listened to the sounds of revelry by night and danced in company with Charles O'Malley, the Irish dragoon; Fred. Power and his dark-eyed Senora, George Osborn, Capt. Dobbin, and the ever-fascinating Mrs. Rawdon Crawley. Lord Rokeby, in those days Ensign Henry Montague, and junior officer of his regiment, was also the last survivor of the British officers who were present at the defence of Hougomont, and had many tales to tell of that famous episode of the 18th of June, when the Coldstreams and Third Foot Guards suffered so heavily, the latter losing no less than thirteen of its officers.

THEIR HEAVY YOKE.

Women of New York Who Labor to Screen Their Poverty from Fashion's Eye.

"One half the people in New York live," said a philosopher the other day, "and the other half pretend to live." This is truer than most people suspect. The number of persons who give their lives to making an appearance is astonishing, and the devices to which they resort to be thought genteel and to avoid working for a living would astonish the world if fully exposed. One of the most interesting cases of shabby genteel will be found at the Family Hotel. Every one of these establishments has one or more lodgers who live in the top of the house in the cheapest apartments, next to the servants; who take their meals at cheap restaurants or beer saloons, but who dress well, and use monogram note paper, and receive their company in the hotel parlor, and generally assume the style and airs of retired well-to-do people. In one case recently brought to the attention of the writer, a lady and her two daughters occupied rooms at one of the most fashionable hotels in the city for two years. Her daughters furnished the income, by very hard work, one of them as a copyist, and the other in a large telegraphic house. But no one in the hotel ever suspected that they depended upon their labor for their income. The young ladies made together about $25 or $30 a week, and on this sum they managed by the most pinching economy in eating, to dress well and move in a certain circle. But the air of disdain with which they spoke of people who were compelled to work and the poetic references they constantly made to their blood and ancestry produced the most respectful treatment from all who came in contact with them. A young lady and her father, who lived at the Westminster for some time and passed as a belle in certain sets, worked in a book-binder's establishment in Nassau street, and actually supported her father in his genteel airs. In this case it came to the knowledge of the writer that this young lady, on more than one occasion, went supperless to bed because she had to pay for a coupe.

Another form of pretentious gentility is found in those families that hire houses, and then sub-let all but a couple of rooms, retaining the use of the parlor to make a show, and always turning up their noses at people who are compelled to live in flats. "O, we," they always say, "couldn't be restricted to a flat, you know. It may do for people who have never had the freedom of a whole house, but we must have our own establishment." If they live in a basement house they have to put up sometimes with a doctor or a dentist, but they compromise by calling his room the library when they have a party. There are hundreds of genteel people living on Lexington Avenue, who for the sake of making it appear that they occupy a whole house to themselves, are content to bunk in the garret and cook with the oil stove. But they make enough off their wages to dress well and have a coach and livery take them to the park in the afternoon. It is said, by those who know, that the gay cavalcade to be seen on a pleasant afternoon on the avenue is made up in the unequal proportions of millionnaires and beggars, who, so far as dress is concerned, can not be distinguished from each other.

In the ranks of the operatives who live on the East Side it is curious to know that a coach is the sign of gentility. To be able to hire a coach is the weakness of hundreds of girls who work by the week down town, and it is for this reason, perhaps, that in the poor classes funerals have become a sort of evidence of gentility, the condition of the family being rated by the number of coaches. There are scores of girls who give music lessons who spend nearly all they make at the livery stable. They are driven to their pupils' houses in coupes, and they are very particular about the livery. The superintendent of a large envelope factory in this city said that some years ago a fainting epidemic broke out among his girls. Without any premonition whatever, an operator would suddenly fall over as if dead, and he was in the habit sometimes of calling a carriage and sending the invalid home. But when the thing grew to affect the whole factory, he turned one of his rooms into a hospital, from which moment not a girl fainted. It was not till some time after that he discovered by accident that it was the ride home in the coach that had brought on the epidemic.—New York Journal.

"I have no wealth," she said; "I can give you only my hand and heart." And then he thought that if her heart was as big as her hand, she was indeed wealthy.

Music-teacher—"You see that note with an open space? That's a whole note? Can you remember that? Scholar—"Yes'em; a whole note is a note that has a hole in it."

"I don't love you, and I won't marry you," she said to him in a pet. "Two negatives make an affirmative; my dear, let's go and see the parson," he answered, quietly. She went.

When the railway is completed across the whole length of Newfoundland, corresponding with fast steamers on either side, the ocean voyage to the United States will be shortened to four days, and the distance between New York and London lessened by forty-eight hours.

Physical courage which despises all danger will make a man brave in one way, and moral courage which despises all opinion will make a man brave in another. The former would seem most necessary for the camp, the latter for council; but to constitute a great man both are necessary.

It may be set down as a rule that no one can ever afford not to be a gentlemen. It is best to learn this rule early and practice it late. It is not well to say mean things of another, because in most cases you will have to take it all back in bitterness of heart when he does you an unexpected favor. It is not wise to treat any one brusquely, because you can not always judge a bird by the feathers he has on. It is not well to look down on any body because the time may come when he will look down upon you. There is a certain selfhood in every one which should be respected. We have no right to infringe upon it. It is not morality, it is not mere conventional rule, it is not simply a social regulation; it is something in the nature of things that you should always show a delicate regard for others. One who did not fail here was never known utterly to fail elsewhere.

THE STRAIGHT TIP.

Newspaper advertising offers such facilities for addressing all classes from which customers would be likely to be attracted, that it is now recognized by shrewd business men as the best of all possible sslesmen—one who never sleeps and is never weary—who goes after business early and late—who accosts the merchant in his shop, the lawyer in his office, the student in his study, the cultivated woman at the family fireside—who can be in a thousand places and speak to a million people each day, saying to each one the best thing in the best manner. It is always at work, and does only and exactly what it is told to do. It can be monopolized by no one, but, while doing your neighbor's work is ready to do as good or better service for you.

OBITUARY.

Amongst the many bereavements by death of late, we have to chronicle the demise of Mr. Chas. Currie, of the South line, Artemesia, on the 22nd ult., at the age of 97 years. Deceased was a native of Islay, Argyllshire, Scotland. He emigrated to Canada in 1374, settling in the township of Chingacousy. In 1851 he with his numerous family removed to Glenelg, in this county in the vicinity of Priceville, and lately to his late residence. Deceased was one in whom the spirit of true Christian charity and benovlance abounded in an eminent degree, and his memory will long remain green and fresh in the hearts of the many who knew his benevolence. His remains were followed to their last resting place in the Presbyterian Cemetery, Priceville, on the 24th by a large asemblage of sorrowing relatives and friends.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of DR. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Durham Bull.—Mr. Robt. McBride has a fine three year old Durham bull for service on lot 99, 2nd con. W. T. & S. Road, Glenelg, one and a half miles West of Markdale. Terms—$1 cash or $1.25 if not so paid. This is a well built animal and shows good breeding.

As St. John's day this year falls on Sunday, June 24th it is expected that the Rev. Mr. McDiarmid will preach a sermon specially for Prince Arthurs Masonic Lodge, of Flesherton, in Markdale on Sunday evening next. A few seats at the front will be reserved for the Masons.

Hot Weather Sellers.—McFarland's 15 cent. Cashmeres. McFarland's Satin Parasols. McFarland's 12½ cent White Cotton. McFarland's 25 cent Silk Gloves. McFarland's 10 cent Prints. McFarland's 40 cent Hoop Skirts. McFarland's uncolored Japan Tea. McFarland's $1.00 Tweeds.

Bears Caught.—On Monday last as Messrs. J. Thibaudeau, D. Whiticar and Geo. Tryon were returning home from Priceville, they saw an old bear and three cubs on the farm of Mr. Patterson. Although these gentlemen were unarmed, they were not afraid of "The Bear," and gave chase, capturing a pair of cubs, some of the farmers of that vicinity turned out with guns but were unsuccessfull in capturing Bruin.

Paisley is growing rapidly. On Sunday week the wife of T. W. Caley added two sons and a daughter to the population.

The Markdale ball club are going to Williamsford on Saturday next, to play a game with the "Young Canadian Officers," of that place.

Mrs. John M. Walker of Duluth, formerly of this place, was brought home to her father's (Mr. Thos. Elliott, sr.) on Tuesday, she having lost her health. Slight hopes are entertained of her recovery.

We have been informed that the committee of management of the Irish Lake Pic-nic, which takes place to-day (Thursday) have chosen the editor of the Grey Review at Durham and the editor of the Markdale Standard as candidates for the gold headed cane.

Rev. Mr. Wilson Presbyterian, preached in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening last to a large and appreciative audience. At the close he referred to the amicable feeling which has existed between Mr. McDiarmid and himself during the past three years, and hoped the same good will and harmony would continue. This is as it should be.

A letter appeared in our last issue from a correspondent, for which of course we are not responsible, containing statements which reflected unfavorably on one of our hotels. Enquiries have been made and the case found to have been very much exaggerated. In justice to the proprietor we may say that the milk of the cow referred to has not been used for weeks, and was not used since any objection was raised to it.

Horses Killed.—Tuesday morning train from Owen Sound struck two horses belonging to Mr. Marshall Ward, on the track at the foot of Berkeley grade, killing both animals. It appears the horses got on the track by a gate being left open either accidentally or maliciously, and as there is a curve on the track, the engine driver did not see them in time to prevent the accident. Mr. Ward's loss will be great as his circumstances can ill afford such a misfortune.

Accident.—One day last week, as Mr. John Gale, Ass't. County Clerk, was helping to take a large roll of carpet down the stairs from the Masonic Hall, the person who had hold of it above was unable to hold on, and the roll came down with great force on Mr. Gale, knocking him down the stairs, fracturing his collar bone and inflicting other injuries. He was confined to the house for several days, but we are glad to see he is now able to be around again.—O. S. Times.

Other Assignments.—It has been an unpleasant duty to us of late to chronicle the news that townsmen were in financial difficulties, but sad is it to us this week to announce the embarrassment of one through whose difficulty we are affected. Thursday evening last Mr. H. H. Stovel, of the Vulcan Foundry, here, assigned to Mr. J. J. Cook. Through this we were compelled to follow suit. The foundry was closed about eleven o'clock Friday morning and will remain closed until the first meeting of creditors, on next Tuesday. The printing office will be carried on by the trustees with "closed doors;" all work to be paid for in cash at time of ordering.—Mt. Forest Confederate.

"Immigrant Childben."—Mr. John T. Middlemore, the founder of the Orphan Children's Emigration Charity, London Ont., left Liverpool on the 7th inst., in the S. S. Circassion, with a party of 50 girls and 80 boys between the ages of 3 and 15 years, who are brought out to this country for adoption or hire, chiefly among farmers. They are expected to arrive at the Guthrie Home, near the city, on or about the 20th inst., this will be Mr. Middlemore's 11th annual visit to these shores with juvenile emigrants from Birmingham, England, since 1872. Already many applications accompanied with good references have been made for the children expected to arrive, but more are required. Further particulars may be obtained by addressing Mr. H. Gibbens, manager of the Guthrie Home, London, Ont.

SERIOUS AFFAIR.

A MAN SHOT IN THE LEGS BY HIS NEIGHBOR AT BRUSTER'S LAKE, WHILE FISHING.

The above lake is situated about half a mile north of the Collingwood road, at a distance three miles South of Singhampton, and covers some 70 acres of land, being about all on the property of Mr. Wm. Brewster. It appears Brewster has cultivated speckled trout in this beautiful lake, which in former years was entirely without such, hence considered that he had the undivided control of the fishing in said water. It appears David Johnston, whose farm adjoins the lake, and part of which is said to be on his property, went fishing on Monday the 11th, when Brewster fired a shot in the direction of him, the shot taking effect in Johnstons legs, the wounds are not likely to prove serious. Johnston had Brewster arrested, and he was conveyed to Owen Sound jail, last Thursday, to await his trial. He was admitted out the following day on bail.

FROM APRIL TO JUNE.

I.

We knew we were not the first married people who had had misunderstandings, though we both seemed to try to understand. It went along month after month, until my wife said she couldn't bear it any longer, and told me frankly that she could'nt live with me in this way, and must go away—somewhere. So we agreed to see what a temporary separation would do for us.

We had known and seen so many happily married people, as well as many others whom we knew who were completely miserable in looking back, and more hopelessly forward, that, before starting life together, we had agreed that in the latter case, under similiar circumstances, life would be unbearable to us, and we would find a remedy some way; that life was short, at best, etc., etc. Yet here we were, less than two years married, growing farther apart every day, and less happy, scarcely realizing why.

One thing she said, I continually aroused her combativeness as no other person had ever done, awakening a resistance in her nature which she never knew she possessed in such a degree until she married me. And, in return, I told her that she tried my patience more than any living being, and sometimes, beyond its utmost limits.

When the good-byes were said I remember the regretful look in her eyes as she said, "I am afraid sometimes, Albert, that you do not love me;" and, hard as it was to part from her, and in such a way, in the endeavor to conceal my emotion, I, perhaps coolly, replied, "I shouldn't wonder if there was something of the kind the matter on both sides." She made no answer to this, but said "Good-by" once more. Only two weeks since she went away, and it seems like two years. There! there! I'll be a man, and not a silly, lonely boy. I guess I can manage to get along without her very well. I'll ride: I'll walk; I'll write, read, and smoke. Oh, there are plenty of ways to occupy one's mind, and get out of one's self—confound it!

II.

Two weeks since I left home. Home! It wasn't a home in the true sense; for it lacked nearly everything but external comforts. Still—if "the home is where the heart is," I think—I will not be so foolish. I can scarcely believe I possess a heart, or I should not be the woman I am, and here. Oh, I shall get along by myself, all alone!

How beautiful, how quiet it is here! The view from the window alone would charm the eye, and warm the heart of any sensitive appreciative beholder. Nature's restfulness a night like this should calm all inward restlessness. Strange it does not mine. Ah! there are some bicyclers coming around the curve in the road. I'll watch them. Perhaps my husband is with them. But, no; I am sure he would come alone for me. How often he used to laugh at me, and say it seemed the height of my ambition to ride a bicycle. Well, I couldn't think of anything that I imagined would make me happier sometimes, when he would mount his wheel at the door, and ride off. The thought of being able to do the next thing to flying, your own will the master of the thing you guide, few unseen obstacles in the way, giving courage to conquer the seen, if there are any.

I remember saying to my husband once, when he left home looking very sober, and came back with his face lighted with real pleasure and the healthful glow of exercise, that it seemed to me there were more recreations and pleasures in life, at any rate more panaceas for lack of pleasures, for men than for women. He replied (though I don't believe he really meant it), "You women don't ask for them, thereby creating a supply for the need. A woman's way, if anything is the matter, is to think, and feel, principally the latter, instead of actively taking hold of some kind of work or diversion." I always seemed to provoke such replies from him, though there isn't a better or kinder-hearted man in the world, I know.

If a woman's only true place is in the home, and her mission to make it happy, then, indeed, my life is a failure in spite of my efforts. But what's the use of sitting here so down-hearted? I came to get rid of it. I'll take a walk.

III.

"It seems to me 'twould be better to go back the same way we came, and take the first road to the right after we get around the curve, for I am sure we ought not to have come this way," said one of three bicycle riders to his two companions.

"All right," replied the others.

"Look at that house over yonder, George," continued the first speaker. "I wouldn't object to the daily view one would have from those upper west windows for a morning tonic and evening sedative, would you?"

"'Tis fine, that's a fact," answered the person addressed as George.

"I caught a view of a woman's face at one of the windows, as we passed before, that attracted me. Did either of yon notice it!" asked the third gentleman, who had not spoken until now.

"No," they both replied.

"I believe there it is now, coming toward us. Yes, I am sure!" rather eagerly said the one who had seen the face first at the window.

The three rode past her, meeting her interested half look at them with a sort of respectful response, as seemed allowable on the quiet country road under the circumstances.

"I don't think it would be a very grievous act of impropriety to ask her if she can direct us to R——, do you?" said Number Three, after they were some distance by, addressing the others.

"You can if you want to," said One and Two, "and we'll dismount and wait here."

Turning his wheel, and quickly overtaking her, as quickly dismounting and raising his hat, he said,—

"Madame, pardon me; but would you be kind enough to tell me, as a representative of my party, the nearest, most direct way to R——"

In a full but sweet voice, that was an influence in itself, she replied,—

"I am not thoroughly familiar with these surroundings yet, as I have only been here a few days; but I think you take the first road to the right after passing the curve. If you wish to feel more sure about it, the people in the second house on the left will gladly tell you, and more in detail."

"Many thanks, and I trust you will excuse the interruption of your walk," said the bicycler.

"There is nothing to excuse, and I should be happy to tell you more definitely if I knew," replied she.

Gracefully lifting his hat again, he mounted his machine, rode to the house she had mentioned, and after a few moments joined his party, and told them the result of his inquiries.

"We never knew before that you were such a susceptible follow," said one of his companions, laughingly, after he had told the result of his inquiries.

"Why didn't you go to the house first?" asked the other.

He made no reply to either, and seemed unusually indifferent to their attempted jokes.

It has always been unexplainable, and probably always will be, the instantaneous but lasting impressions that men and women sometimes make upon each other,—impressions that, under favorable conditions, throw the remainder of their lives into real and actual association, of greater or less intimacy, for the happiness or misery of all concerned; and, on the other hand, if not amounting to this, never wholly losing power or influence at different times, and in different ways, all through life.

This woman who, from a moment's conversation, had been able to cause immediate and noticeable abstraction and inattentiveness on the part of the man who was always one of the most attentive and appreciative companions, had brought such a moment to his life, though he did not at once realize it in any great degree; but he did realize that he meant to see her again, somehow.

It was not so difficult a matter, after all; for, in his inquiries and short conversation at the house to which she had directed him, he had learned that summer boarders were solicited. And following the thought came others as quickly; that vacation time was near at hand; what a place it would be for a man to rest in, to ride in, to fish in! etc. All the country around was attractive and picturesque; roads good; fishing good, so they told him; and besides—oh, well! let that take care of itself.

In a week more he and one of his friends were domesticated at the house.

IV.

I never thought five weeks in a man's life could be so long. Can there be any way or anything that I have not thought of towards solving a problem that will turn the scale of two lives for the future years, for happiness or its reverse? I begin to know my wife since she left me,—to see and understand her better, I think, than when she was with me. I begin to see now that it was possibly the strong, intense individuality of her nature, coming in close contact with mine, that irritated and annoyed me, and aroused my impatience. I used to think often, before we were married, that her will would be hard to bend to another's; and yet she had the noblest heart,—kind, loving, impulsive, forgiving, charitable, high, and sincere in all its motives, but yet in constant conflict with her head; perhaps I have not studied the heart enough. This letter before me doesn't help matters much in that direction, however:—

M——, June 10, 1882.

MY HUSBAND:—Believing that every sincere letter is worthy of an answer, I answer yours, though I understood you were not to communicate with me.

It almost seemed like a love letter, and that you missed me very much; but I dare not call it so, and attribute its being sent out of regard for my personal comfort as to manner of every-day living, etc. I thank you, and am glad to write that I am very comfortable; in fact, this is an unusual place in every way.

One funny thing I must tell you, and a joke I rather enjoy; they all call me Miss Woodbury. In answering the advertisement of course I signed my name as usual, Emily A. Woodbury; and not being inquisitive people, and I not correcting their mistake, they took it for granted that I must be Miss I suppose—an old maid with some means, very likely, and here for rest and quiet.

After I had been here a week two other ladies came,—a middle-aged lady and her very pretty young sister,—and a day or two later two gentlemen made their appearance. It seems that they were attracted by the beauty of the place when riding by a few days before on their bicycles. They are all really very delightful people as it happens, and a good deal of the same mind, as they like to be let alone when they feel like it. Mr. Arnold and Mr. Barker (the two gentlemen) have made some very pleasing discoveries in riding around the country on their bicycles; and, last night, for the first time, but perhaps not for the last, the two gentlemen, on their bicycles, and Miss Raymond and I, on very fair saddle horses, rode several miles and back, reaching home about nine o'clock, finding a nice little lunch awaiting us. Mr. Barker says he often rides this way with his sister.

All this in answer to your inquiries as to my surroundings; and towards you, as you ask "how" so earnestly, like the friend I always mean to be.—Sincerely,

EMILY.

P.S.—If you want to write occasionally, I shall be glad to answer.

Humph! Miss Woodbury! Two gentlemen bicyclers! Two lady horseback riders! Nice little lunches!

I can see pretty well, what my wife will be the last to see, what will come next on the programme; for she is an attractive woman, and unusually unconscious of it. If she would only tell them she is married I should feel better satisfied. However, I'll not fret about it now as she seems to be having a good time. And I'll bear this way of living as long as I can, anyway until we can come to a better understanding some way.

V.

"Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain, which, with pain purchased, doth inherit pain."

He had not meant to tell her so soon, but everything helped to make it easy; the earnest impulsive nature within him could not withstand the magnetic power of the surrounding scenes of this closing of a rare June day, and the stronger magnetism of the woman sitting beside him. He told her in the sincere, ardent language of an earnest and whole-souled man, to whom love has come unexpectedly and as an unlooked for possession, that he loved her, that as they were companions to night for an hour, so he wished for her harmonious companionship for every future hour of life; and—

With a strange look upon her face, she interrupted him with, "Please, oh, I entreat you to stop for a moment; give me just a chance to think before you go further." The look of distress on her face as she appealed to him he could not interpret, but it quieted him at once. After a few moments of silence she turned to him, and, in a voice filled with emotion, said, "It was my duty long ago to be frank with you; and if you can find it in your heart to forgive me for delaying it until now, it will be an hour that will stand out forever in my life. I am married; and, though not wishing to or thinking of deceiving anyone, I have allowed a mistake to pass uncorrected that was taken for granted as correct. I want you to believe that in our pleasant hours together I have had no thought or wish to lead you on to this. Tell me truly if you think I have."

"No," sadly, "you haven't," was his reply.

She went on: "I came here six weeks ago, to the house where we are boarding, to find respite, or relief, or remedy, or something,—I did not know what,—from troubes that hung like fast gathering shadows over two lives. I have been contented to dream, to sleep, to ride, to be social,—in fact, to do almost anything to help find a way out,—and that the days have been plessant in many ways I cannot deny. I cannot ask you, as maybe many woman would, if you can forget at once, and simply be my friend. I have found out (though not perhaps until this very moment) that the man who really loves the one woman, or the woman who really loves the one man, cannot forget, and will never be resigned, more than outwardly, to be simply the friend. But I do ask you, with humility, to forgive me,—forgive me for having brought you to caring for me. Can you?" hesitatingly.

A longer silence, and then he replied: "Let me take your hand; let me look in your face, in your eyes. Yes, I forgive, though there is nothing to forgive. I thank you for giving me an insight into your noble, womanly nature. If my love is a hopeless one, I can never deem it a frivolous one, when the object is the woman you are and will ever be to me."

After a silence that it seems hard to ever break, at last finding courage he said, "You will not think me ungallant if I ask you to allow me to leave you here, after helping you to your saddle, as it will not be dark for two hours yet, and the way home is a safe and familiar one? I cannot go with you to night"—"I had rather you would leave me," she replied, with deep but unspoken sympathy in her glance and tone; and with his help mounted the horse they had left grazing by the roadside, and rode away. After standing where she had left him for a few moments, he walked to his bicycle that was standing by a stone wall near by, and, wheeling it to the road, stood looking at it as if it were human; and in a sort of undertone, addressed it, saying,

"You have been a good friend to me; you brought me health when I thought it was gone beyond return. Be my still dearer friend now. Help, in future days, to carry me where sunshine and brightness will shine into my inner life, that seems darkened forever. You brought me to her; you take me away from her; but still I do not blame you, and shall always believe in you,—my good companion, my faithful steed!" After having walked some little way by its side, he mounted and rode away; and, when all the inmates of "the second house on the left" were supposed to be sleeping, he rode into the yard, entered the house, and after leaving his machine in its accustomed place went to his room.

VI.

A thoughtful, tired man, sitting at a desk writing, with plenty of work heaped around him, is aroused by a knock at the door, enough to respond with a faint "Come in." He cannot see from where he sits who enters the door as it opens, but soon by his side he see "Emily!"

"Yes, Albert, I've come home."

"Dear little girl, lay your head here on my shoulder. Look in my eyes, Emily. Are you any longer 'afraid sometimes' that I do not love you? I know that you are not. Your dear eyes are shining with the new light of awakened love, and this is truly a joyous home-coming. Do I want you to tell me how you learned to know? No, my wife, I can guess; and I trust you now, ever, and always."

"Albert, I'm too happy to believe this can last,—that I am with you never to leave you; that you are mine,—I am yours. And I think I have found out one secret. If you will try and be more patient with me, I am sure I can be less impatient myself, more unselfish, more"—

"Stop, Emily! I am the one to ask this of you; and when I forget to be so, I deserve to forfeit the love that never came to me until to day, in the same way; and while we may always be 'friends,' can we not be lovers too?"

"From April to June, from June to April; now, always, and forever, my husband, my friend, my lover."

A Kathleen Mavourneen Loan.

A debtor who was sued by his creditor acknowledged that he had borrowed the money, but declared that the plantiff knew at the time that it was a Kathleen Mavourneen loan. "A Kathleen Mavourneen loan?" replied the Court with a puzzled look. "That's it, judge, one of the 'it may be for years, and it may be for ever' sort."

A man who had never seen the inside of a law court until he was recently introduced as a witness in a case pending in one of the Scotch courts, on being sworn, took a position with his back to the jury, and began telling his story to the judge. The judge, in a bland and corteous manner, said—"Address yourself to the jury, sir." The man made a short pause, but, not comprehending what was said to him, forthwith continued his narrative. The judge was then more explicit, and said to him—"Speak to the jury, sir—the men sitting behind you on the benches." The witness at once turned round, and, making an awkward bow, said, with great gravity of manner—"Good morning, gentlemen!

TURKISH WOMEN

Their Larger Liberties and Their Own Exclusive Tea-Parties.

A Constantinople letter in the Brooklyn Eagle says: Turkish women are not shut up. They go out when they please. If a husband meets his wife on the street he makes no sign of recognition. If he perceives her halting before a draper's stall and gazing at silks dearer than he can afford, he must possess his soul in resignation, muttering "Mash Allah." This respect for women prevails also in the home circle, and it comes natural to the Mussulman, who has been taught from boyhood to behave courteously to the softer sex. Turkish girls are unaffectedly modest. Those of the lower class who are engaged as servants in the houses of Frank residents are much preferred to Greeks or Armenians for their excellent behaviour, cleanliness and regard for truth. Looking upon marriage as their natural destiny they are careful of their reputations, and when married make first-rate housewives. No doubt a tourist who compares the Turkey of to-day with that of twenty-five years ago would find some departures from the strict womanly reserve which used to be the universal rule. The mistress of the harem dresses much like a French lady nowadays, reads French novels and plays the piano; though she has some gorgeous Turkish costumes which she dons upon state occasions, such as the calvas, when she entertains other ladies. Calva means a cake, but it has come to designate a party at which the dainty is eaten. When a Turkish lady gives a calva her husband is excluded from the harem while the strange women are in the house. These guests begin to arrive toward 6, accompanied by their maid servants and negroes carrying lanterns and bringing their children with them. Closely muffled, they divest themselves of their burnouses in the ante-room, and put on delicate satin slippers which they have brought with them in bags. The reception rooms are brilliantly lighted up with pink wax candles and scented with fragrant pastilles. There is no kissing or hand shaking between the hostess and her guests; but each lady as she comes in lifts her hand gracefully to her heart, her lips, and her brow, which means, "I am devoted to you with heart, mouth, and mind." This mode of salutation, when smilingly performed is very pretty. The greetings being ended, the company seat themselves on chairs if there be any Frank ladies present, if not they betake themselves to the divans and carpets, while the children go off all together to be regaled in some other room. Cigarettes, coffee, and sweetmeats are handed round, and, while these things are being discussed, the ladies are bound to pay one another complements about their respective dresses, which are sure to be most sumptuous, and, indeed, are sometimes worth a fortune. After the coffee, dancing girls are introduced, and at this stage of the proceedings the elderly ladies generally settle down to cards and backgammon. In some houses, where Christian manners have penetrated, a lady pianist rattles off waltzes and operatic music to amuse the company; but this does not exclude the performance of the native dancing girls, whose gyrations and music with lambourines and castanets are much appreciated. These almees are seldom older than 14, and no married woman ever joins the dance.

Oysters Grown on Trees.

For years the waters of Poquonoc River, Conn., have been noted as producing the most delicious oysters known in the world. The demand was far in excess of the supply. On account of the thick black mud that plastered the bed of the river, and which is fatal to oyster-culture, only a small margin of the bottom, a rocky strip far in shore, could be utilized by the oyster-growers. It was not until three or four years ago that a speculative and inventive Yankee devised a plan for extending the oyster cultivation upon the mud bottoms. He went into his woods and cut down a forest of tough, wiry white birches, dragged them to the bank, bore them to his boat upon the river, and dumped them overboard, taking care that they should be left at proper intervals on the bottom. He had an idea that the oyster spawn would come sailing along in the season, catch hold of the birch boughs, and grow into a fabulous fortune for him. The idea was a good one, but not perfected. He allowed the birch to lie a suitable time and then pulled them up. Every bough and twig was thick with half-grown bivalves, but the weight of the growing shells had dragged the brush down into the fatal mud, and the oysters had perished by the million.

Enlightened by his failure he made another trial. He planted the birches upright on the bottom, setting them at an angle with the current. The submerged trees were from fifteen to twenty feet in length, and the butts, which were three or four inches in diameter, were thrust three or four feet into the mud. Their tops just pricked through the waves at low tide. It was just what the oysters wanted, a ready-made home. They drifted as thick as snowflakes to the bending boughs and pliant twigs. Singly they were so small as to be almost invisible, but their legions speckled the trees with browniah patches. The trees bowed under their load of growing shells, but the elastic wood kept the fruit clear of the mud. At the end of a few months it was seen that the oyster orchards promised an astonishing harvest. All the oystermen along the river were anxious to try their hand at the new style of oyster farming. Under the law of the State the mud bottom on each side of the 100-foot channel was staked and set off in plats to a dozen or more applicants to be planted with oyster trees. Soon both sides of Poquonoc River, from its head for a long way towards the sea was, bristling with sunken birches, waving an ebbing and flowing welcome to the drifting spat.—Norwich (Conn.) Correspondence N. Y. Times.

Prince Bismarck has of late repeatedly expressed himself in very despondent language in reference to the state of his health. The Chancellor is believed to be in no imminent danger, yet his maladies are such as frequently to prevent him taking any outdoor exercise. This is the case at the present time. The consequence of the confinement, in addition to the neuralgic complaint from which he suffers so much torment, is to lower his general tone of health, besides compelling him to decline invitations from the Imperial family, or from any other quarter, however distinguished.

Eccentric Phraseology.

Public speakers no doubt have much to contend with, or what could have induced a leading lecturer to classify his audience thus: The "fidgetyites," the "interrupters," the "all-attentives," the "quick-repliers," the "hard-to-lifts," the "quick-readers," and the "get-up-and-go-outs." This latter way, is somewhat on a par with what reaches us from Chicago, where the young men are said to be known, according to their skill as velocipedists, by such names as "timid-toddlers," the "wary-warblers," the "go-it-gracefuls," and the "fancy-few." In fact, from this particular quarter of the globe we are furnished with some curious specimens of puzzling phraseology. It is said that when a Chicago girl quarrels with her lover, she communicates the important fact to her intimate friends in the form that she "isn't on squeezing terms with the fraudulent individual no more." A dictionary, too, of the same place has the following on his signboard: "Letter-carrier, appointment, altisonant town-crier, envoy, external paper-hanger, tenor, faded habiliments, hair abbreviator, asia dealer, adroit horse-trimmer, agent, nightman, &c." And in the neighborhood we are informed that a tel-keeper writes his own bill of fare, by saving the cost of printing; it announces "Coffy, soupe, roste befe, fride am, and bakt potaties, fride coul puddins mins py."

There is decidedly something peculiar these announcements, especially to us ishers;" but probably nothing is further the minds of the people themselves than notion that there is anything about funny, or even odd. A magistrate of parts, for instance, would hardly himself after this fashion. One was by an attorney upon some strange "Is that law, your Honor?" He "If the court understand itself, I think she do, it are!" On the other London possesses a phraseology of and is at times rather amusing than wise. Two pedestrians were recently costed in terms the most magniloquent a street-beggar: "Good gentlemen, kindly administer the balm of consolation to a wrecked and debilitated constitution."

"Our 'buses," said a conductor in an inquiry made, "runs a quarter arter, quarter to, and at!" A young from the country, while exploring one of quiet lanes in the City for a dinner, ears mysteriously saluted by a shrill from an eating-house, which uttered tones the following incomprehensible gon: "Biledlamancapersora, Roseleaf goos, Bilerabbitbileporkanonionsora, muttonantaters, Biledamancabbage bles, walkinsirtakeaseatsir!" It is the astonished countryman hastened pace, in order to find a house where English was spoken: and the probability had he ventured as far as the suburbs of town, he would have been equally bewildered. At a public garden in the same suburbs, a waiter during last observing some of his master's customers surreptitiously departing before the bill paid, roared out to another attendant, "run Joe there's a glass of brandy-and two teas a quart of shrimps and a birdseye just bolted over the blessed After 'em."—Chambers's Journal.

It must have pained Abd-el-Kader a deal not to have seen the Brooklyn before he died, but such is life. I have over the bridge myself on foot, and it all the same to the trustees, who want the odd cents they can pick up, I shall it again, not if the court knows herself. first had to walk a half mile up hill and half a mile down hill, and the day was and there was quite a crowd, and when got to the end of the trip and dropped a street car. I felt as if I wanted to there a week and have a good rest. the bridge is a success, anyway, whether patronize it again or not. It has been just a week, and about 1,000,000 have ed it already. When the curiosity to see wears off, and the rush settles down steady travel, the number crossing each will probably be under 100,000. As as 20,000 can cross at one time, but makes a crowd, and the crowding will last. The trains will be running in and mouth, and they will probably relieve foot-path a good deal, though the fare five cents for about one mile will be pretty steep. The bridge is a good place to get view of New York and its surroundings. The metropolis itself is all spread out below, and all notable buildings and points of interests from the Battery to Harlem plainly visible. If the air is clear, the big bridge, High Bridge, which was once great a wonder as this is, and which crosses the Harlem River about ten miles away can easily be seen. Looking over New York and across the North River, which should always be called by its right name, the Hudson, but isn't, the eye takes in Jersey City and Hoboken, with the high wooded ridge to the north where Hamilton and Burr fought their famous duel, and in the far distance a glimpse of Newark may be had, with the misty blue line of the Orange Mountains beyond. On the south lies Staten Island, apparently not over three or four miles away, and almost directly underneath is Governor's Island, so near that Gen. Hancock were out of doors his white mustache might almost be recognized. Brooklyn is all spread out just as New York is, with Williamsburg, Greenpoint and Newtown, ter's Point extending in succession towards the north, the hills of Long Island looming up beyond, Blackwell's Island and Ward's Island showing plainly toward the south, and the sound itself, beyond Hell Gate, visible by the contrast of white sails with the blue water. It is really worth while to cross the bridge for the sake of the view.

"I wish my hair cropped very close," remarked Charles to the barber, "and," dropping his voice, "I'll come in the last of the week and pay you." Charles still wears his hair long; the barber was willing to "shingle" but not "slate" him.

The Women's Club, of Pittsburgh, listened to an "exhaustive paper on coal," read by one of its members. Reporters were not admitted, so that it cannot be stated whether in the opinion of the club, coal should be brought up by the husband, with the kindling, or separately.

NORTH-WEST NOTES.

Pithy Paragraphs Selected from the Prairie Province Papers.

Portage la Prairie has had a case of glan[ders]

Distemper prevails among the horses at Brandon.

A trout was brought into Macleod recently which weighed thirty pounds.

Upwards of 600 men are now employed in the C. P. machine and repair shops at Winnipeg.

The C. P. R. are about to erect in Winnipeg a new $120,000 car shop and planing mill.

Portage la Prairie will assist to erect an additional mill in that town, giving a bonus of $1,500.

Two bents of the temporary bridge, built at Swift Current Creek last year for the C. P. R., have been carried off by a freshet.

The C. P. R. has abandoned the attempt to secure water at Pense. A well was sunk to the depth of 450 without securing water.

Simpson's survey party is subdividing at the north-western end of Beaver Lake, about thirty-five miles east of Fort Saskatchewan.

The Custom House at Brandon is open. A large quantity of goods in bond await clearance, and the extension gives very general satisfaction.

It is said the party of C. P. R. Surveyors who are camped in the valley of the Pembina near Mary Jane Pass, have recently been examining the country North of the Swan River.

Offers are now being taken towards incorporating Moose Jaw as a city. Over thirty buildings were erected in five weeks, and additions are being laid in almost every direction.

A little two-year-old Cree girl died recently at Edmonton from the effect of fright. A man chased her dog with a pitchfork, and she fancied that it was herself he was pursuing.

Business is not lively at present in the towns, although it is better than it has been. The money market is exceedingly tight, which accounts for much of the dullness.

Mr. Limoreoux, in digging a well recently on his claim in rear of Saskatchewan City, near Sturgeon River mill road, struck a seam of first-class coal, five feet in thickness a few feet below the surface.

About 70 per cent. of the freight going to the North-west from the East is now carried over the Thunder Bay road. The rolling stock on that branch is taxed to its utmost capacity.

Messrs. M. J. Haney, G. R. Crowne, and others have jointly entered an action against the corporation of Winnipeg for permitting filth and refuse to be deposited near their residences; $15,000 damages are asked for.

A Winnipeg paper says the recent rains have given a great impulse to vegetation throughout the country. The crops along the line of railway appear in a very healthy and encouraging condition, and so far the farmers have every reason to feel gratified at the prospects for a good crop.

Red River has about reached the level as last August. Any one looking at it now would hardly believe the water reach the height it does in the spring. when it is both wide and deep. There is a notable change in the banks since last year, as several places they appear to be washed. Such being the case, the overflow is less yearly. Very high water comes seldom.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

No one knows most, grieves most for wasted time.

Hope is the brightest star in the firmament of youth.

Heaven, like the ironsmith, shapes as it strikes.

No man esteems his own misfortune greatest.

Religion without the Spirit is a sun-dial without light.

He who throws out suspicion should at once be suspected himself.

Idleness may occupy the hands; only conscience goes from the heart.

Our actions must clothe us with an immortal, loathsome or glorious.

Christians religion without worship, and worship without the Sabbath.

Men as we divorce love from the occupations of life, we find that labor degenerates into drudgery.

Religious observances of the Lord's day may legitimately be regarded as essential to the Christian life.

One of the best rules in conversation is, never say a thing which any of the company can reasonably wish he had left unsaid.

Home.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day. One surly look casts a gloom over the household for a mile, like a gleam of sunshine, may, even in the darkest and weariest hours. Unexpected flowers which spring up in our path, full of freshness, fragrance, and beauty, so kind words and gentle acts and sweet dispositions make glad the sacred hearth of a united home. No matter how humble the abode, if it be sweetened with kindness and brightened with smiles, the heart will turn longingly toward it from all the tumults of the world, and feel that home, if it be ever so homely, will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the heavens.

An Electrical Thermometer.

The Casella-Goolden doubly-adjustable metal Sixe's thermometer is said to be particularly adapted for greenhouses, hospitals, wards, and sick-rooms, breweries, the decoration of theatres, and all cases where it is essential to preserve a uniform temperature. If the temperature either rises above or falls below the set limits, a bell is sounded or some other signal given at any desired distance from the instrument. It is said that this is the only accurate thermometer ever devised which can be made to give warning of an excess of both heat and cold,

ALL SORTS.

The plumber's motto—Pay the piper.

It takes some headwork to manage a "scull."

A picked nine—The quart of early strawberries.

It only takes a pound of muscle to make a prize-fight.

The hired girl with the dust rag is the chair-rub of the family.

Why are seven days like a spell of sickness?—Because they make one week.

It is easy to make the dull boy smart. Cut his finger and apply salt water.

A man whose best works are always trampled under foot—A carpet manufacturer.

A grey-headed employe on the Metropolitan Railroad is called "silver-top," silver being a tip-top conductor.

Mr. Henry Cake was arrested the other night for hammering his wife with a club. Sort of battercake, as it were.

"Some new picnic baskets are lined with white satin." So says a fashion note. For color we would suggest crushed custard-pie.

Carmine tinted foreheads and chins are the latest craze among the New York belles. To this complexion have we come at last.

A smart young man picked up a flower in a ball-room after all the girls had gone, and sang pathetically, "'Tis the last rose of some her."

"A Florida man has an aligator farm," says an exchange. By and by this item will read: "A farm of alligators has a Florida man."

Isn't it strange that we never hear of dynamite being used in Egypt, where there are more Nileists than anywhere else in the world?

To be tried for his life—The hen-pecked husband. Two cats on the back fence meet purr-chance the usual way. Brought up by hand—The coal-hod.

"Don't say 'entry' Charles," said Mrs. Culture to her son; "'hall' is much more elegant." Next day the young man astonished his friends by speaking of Ald. Shaughnessy's "hall into office."

"That which we call arose by another name would smell as sweet." If you believe that just tell a boy to sleep on at 6 a.m. instead of calling him to "arose," and see how much better it suits him.

A gentleman in Brooklyn, celebrating the birth of a daughter on the day of the opening of the bridge, proposed to call her Victoria, in honor of the Queen's birthday, whereupon a friend (not an Alderman) suggested that a more appropriate name would be Bridget.

A woman has been discovered in New York who receives babies that are not wanted and sells them at $5 and $10 apiece. —Yonkers Gazette. If they are not wanted how does she manage to sell 'em?—Detroit Free Press. If the truth of the transactions were known it would prove a "give away." —Boston Courier.

"Mehitable Jane, I cannot give you another new dress this summer," ejaculated Mrs. Purseproud to her darling, "your father's pocket book has been drained by you now; in fact, it is dry." "But mamma I must." "You must not," interrupted Mrs. P. "You are a—a—" "A regular clothes wringer," rejoined the young lady.

At a fashionable wedding in New York the ceremony was performed under a floral umbrella. This was probably a little suggestion of the bride's mother, who wanted the groom to understand by the emblem that he ought to put up something for a rainy day.—Hartford Times. Oh, no! It was a suggestion for a parasol-taire diamond ear-rings.

A "shocking" cath—"Thunder and lightning." Always work with a will when you try to break one. Elizabeth: No, dear, coffins are not made of dye-wood. Current poetry is generally that which has an easy flow. Canary birds are generally nice and plump, though they go to seed early. "I have struck bed rock," said the tired baby when they put him in the cradle.

Singular Freak of Two Horses.

Just after dusk one recent evening the passengers in a horse car were puzzled and greatly amused by the queer actions of two strange horses. As the car was coming down the avenue two unharnessed horses were observed to come from a side street and trot after the car, keeping their noses close to the rear dash. The conductor tried to drive the animals away, but they kept on, in spite of every effort, to the end of the line, several passengers, among them a clergyman, remaining on board to see the upshot of the novel chase. As the car started on the return trip the two horses followed. After a time the driver chased one off, but the other horse kept resolutely on after the car, stopping when it was stopped, but promptly jogging on when it started. Some of the passengers suggested that the horses had formerly drawn horse cars, but had been sold, and, getting loose, had, through force of habit, followed the first car they met, knowing that they would get a square meal after the night's work was finished. One of the gentlemen who was on the car said that it was a mystery where the horses came from. He was puzzled to account for this action, for he had not met any one who had ever heard of such a strange proceeding by horses.—Newark Call.

A Much-Pelted Earth.

People are so accustomed to looking upon the earth as practically the only material body in the universe, and upon the sky as the realm of unsubstantial phenomena, that it must seem to many a startling thought that our globe is not only literally pelted with meteoric stones, but that as it advances with the sun in his long voyage through space it becomes covered, like any other traveller, with the dust of the journey drifting in upon it from outer and apparently empty space.

Mostly out: "Your sin will surely find you out!" said a pastor, sadly, to a drunken member of his flock. "Well," was the thick reply, "hi guess—hic—she won't be very likely—hic—ter find me in."

Fully to understand a grand and beautiful thought requires, perhaps, as much time as to conceive it.

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

A fatal cutaneous disease is produced in rodents by the "Fulvus fungus," or the Anchorion schloenlinii, as they are called.

It has been stated by a chemist that heating to 120° Centigrade is enough to clear Turkey reds which have been dyed in the presence of a sulpholeate.

Beet-root sugar is now admitted to be quite distinct from cane sugar. Its sweetening power is 30 per cent. lower at least, but its polarizing power is greater.

Mr. H. C. Harvey mentions the case of a cat that has become quite blind from cataract, but is still able to do mousing and to make journeys from and to home.

Pasteur has studied the pneumo-enterite of pigs, which has carried off last year in the Valley of the Rhone alone more than 20,000 swine. He traces the affection to microbia.

Crude honey has been found to keep far better than the clarified kind, but the addition of about 1 per cent. of oxalic acid will do no harm to the honey, but will improve it.

A Polish newspaper says that a rich land proprietor who is living in Plotzle has applied to the Government for permission to build a railroad between that place and the fortress of Novogeorgievsk—a capital name for a terminus.

An artificial leather, says the Engineering, mixed with from 5 to 10 per cent. of sinew and pressed into sheets like ordinary leather card-board, has been recently made in Germany. Both materials are made separately. The leather pieces are washed, cut, boiled in alkaline lye, torn, neutralized with hydrochloric acid, and finally carefully washed once more to remove all traces of acid. The sinews are treated similarly, but steamed in an acid bath until they are like glue. When thus prepared the materials are mixed, pressed into sheets, moistened on both sides with a concentrated solution of alum, and the upper surface is at last given a thin coat of caoucchouc in solution with carbon bisulphide.

And so the bogus Lord Cantyre has been divorced from the lady whom he married—or rather, to speak more exactly, their marriage has been annulled and declared by the courts to have been invalid from the beginning. Our readers will doubtless all remember—we are sure our lady readers will—how a young Englishman, by the name of Allen, met Miss Chaffey in Paris and followed her here visiting at her guardian's residence—that of Judge Siukler, of Perth—and how, taking advantage of a company going to the carnival at Montreal last winter, they were married in that city. Allen had to Miss Chaffey and her friends passed himself off as a Lord Cantyre, and the title doubtless added to his attractions. That she was possessed of about a quarter of a million, added, perhaps, to hers. Anyway, a young lawyer in Montreal passed the bogus lord through, and with the cabman became surety, on getting the license; a clergymen performed the service, and they were pronounced man and wife. The legal informality now proves to have been the want of consent of her guardians—she being a minor. The whole case shows the unsatisfactory state of the marriage law, especially in Quebec. Even here, however, it will stand amendment in the direction that this bogus Lord Cantyre case indicates.

Advance Step in Dentistry.

HAVANA, CUBA.—The most popular dentist of this city, Dr. D. Francisco Garcia, member of the Royal University, states that in all cases of troublesome neuralgia, arising from the teeth, his patrons are recommended to use St. Jacobs Oil, and the most satisfactory cures have followed. It is a specific for toothache, earache, bodily pains, and proof against household accidents.

A young minister named Stocking was presented by his wife with a pair of socks last week. Donations are being received by the ladies of his church to buy him a hose carriage.

FOR THE
KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.
